The English Proficiency test and the need for the Expository Writing 51 course.

Dr. Coder explained that the English staff has been considering offering the course, Expository Writing, to be required of those students who fail the English Proficiency. This course has been offered previously and is listed in the 1948 catalogue. Dr. Coder said that some students fail the English Proficiency test several times. He suggested that those students who fail the English Proficiency test be required to enroll in the Expository Writing course and make a passing grade to satisfy the English Proficiency requirements.

Students are expected to take the English Proficiency test the second semester of the sophomore year which is after they have completed English 1 and 2. It was explained that students may complete these two courses without being proficient in composition. This was discussed.

RECOMMENDATION: It was recommended that anyone failing the English Proficiency examination be required to enroll for Expository Writing 51, the following semester; and this recommendation to be effective immediately upon approval of the faculty. Seconded and carried.
