Report from Nebraska State Teachers College, Chadron, regarding exemption of seniors from final examinations. A report was read from Nebraska State Teachers College, Chadron, Nebraska. Early in the first semester a survey was conducted to determine the standard practice in exempting seniors from final examinations. The survey covered seventy-five teacher training institutions scattered throughout the forty-eight states. The conclusions of the survey conducted by the Nebraska State Teachers College are as follows:

CONCLUSIONS

The general practice throughout the country appears to be that seniors take final examinations. The survey shows that:

1. Sixty-nine (69) out of seventy-five (75) or 92% do not exempt all seniors.
2. Fifty-seven (57) out of seventy-five (75) or 76% do not exempt any seniors.
3. Those who exempt some do so on the basis of:
 - (a) a specific scholarship average
 - (b) the professor's judgment
 - (c) tradition or custom
 - (d) facilitating administration or
 - (e) convenience with reference to spring graduation.
4. One senses from the comments and the percentages listed above that the practice of excusing seniors from final examinations is not generally considered educationally sound nor of wide-spread acceptance.
