Soviet troops will withdraw from Afghanistan. South African-supported rebels in Mozambique will cease their attacks on the government and a committee will be established to discuss problems in Lebanon. These three events, as well as several others, would take place if delegates in the Fort Hays State Model United Nations had their way. The delegates were representative teams from area high schools. Most of the delegates came prepared for Model U.N. "We went back and studied the history and the things that were going to be discussed for Model U.N.," Tanya Robins, Oakley High School, said. "We went to the library and researched the United Arab Emirates; their policies in the past and their history in actual world affairs and in the U.N.," Chris Bruhl, Thomas More Prep-Marian High School, said. "We've looked over the resolutions and basically picked out what we're supporting and what we're not," Bruhl said. Larry Gould, associate professor of political science, is the chief organizer for the Model U.N. Yesterday, however, Gould was in Topeka and could not attend. So Louis Furmanski, assistant professor of political science, took his place. "Professor Gould is the major impetus of the Model U.N.," Furmanski said. Furmanski said the General Assembly worked efficiently. Four resolutions were passed in the General Assembly yesterday, whereas some Model U.N. sessions have had much less success. "I think the General Assembly is going better this year than it

Culture issue tabled during SGA meeting

By Carl Patz
Senior staff writer

Discussion of the university cultural experience issue was tabled last night at the Student Government Association meeting. A Senate resolution regarding the university cultural events, which had been moved to emergency business at the meeting, was left open for more discussion after a report from Martin Shapiro. Shapiro, the chairman of the Faculty Senate student affairs committee, and members of the Senate discussed the issue and a new proposal initiated by the committee. The proposal, which will go before the Faculty Senate in early December, said that the purpose of the university cultural experience was "to ensure that graduates of Fort Hays State will have been exposed to a variety of cultural experiences." The proposal said that undergraduates would be required to attend three cultural events of their choice during the semester. "Any student admission charges would be waived for the purpose of fulfilling this requirement," the proposal said. The specific events that would be included in the program would be selected by a committee consisting of students and faculty, the proposal said. Shapiro told the senate that a part of the proposal regarding grades for a non-credit course, "University Cultural Experience," would be recorded on the students transcript.

He said that assuming a three-event requirement that for three events attended by a student that an A grade would be recorded and so on with no events attended resulting in a U (Uncultured), appearing on a students transcript. The Senate, after more discussion of the event moved to table the resolution until more information could be provided. The proposal, the second by the Faculty Senate committee, will be heard by all members of the student affairs committee at 4 p.m. on Monday in Malloy 108. Shapiro said that after that meeting that a proposal would be presented to the entire Faculty Senate. Two other resolutions were passed at the meeting last night which lacked the attendance of SGA president Kevin Amack and vice president Chris Crawford. Amack is meeting with the Kansas Board of Regents while Crawford was in Wichita on personal matters. One resolution passed dealt with the approval of forming a committee to aid the SGA office and other Senate committees. The second resolution, which was moved to emergency business, called for student support of an SGA book exchange. The resolution said that "the students of FHSU have been receiving a low return on the resale of their books." A book exchange operated by the SPURS and SGA would allow a fair exchange of student books," the resolution said.

National Panhellenic Council renders sorority rush decision

By Karl Austin
Copy editor

The National Panhellenic Council has rendered its decision concerning illegal sorority summer rush. Delta Zeta and Sigma Sigma Sigma were named in a formal charge to National Panhellenic by Alpha Gamma Delta. The decision was handed down "approximately a month ago," Dorothy Knoll, Panhellenic Council adviser, said. However, an amendment letter, dated Nov. 4, arrived at Fort Hays State. The decision was in the form of a three-point plan. "This is what was rendered by the National Panhellenic Council concerning the appeal of the rush infraction charge by Alpha Gamma Delta against Delta Zeta and Sigma Sigma Sigma," Knoll said. They ruled, No. 1, that "there was a serious violation of the Panhellenic compact by Delta Zeta and Sigma Sigma Sigma, which is one of the unanimous agreements of the National Panhellenic Conference." Knoll said, quoting the National Panhellenic decision. The violation regarded illegal recruiting of pledges for individual sororities at times other than those designated for rushing. The second point dealt with the penalty National Panhellenic decided to hand down. Before May 1988, the DZa and the Tri-Sigs must organize a workshop to discuss Panhellenic policy. All three sororities must attend, and the ruling stated that alumnae, actives, Knoll and other FHSU administrators must be invited. The third point said that DZ and Tri-Sig national or regional representatives and the National Panhellenic area adviser, Harriet Rodenberg, must be invited to the workshop as well. Rodenberg's expenses must be absorbed by the DZ and Tri-Sig national offices. Knoll said National Panhellenic did not become involved with the university's actions concerning sorority sponsors, but that FHSU will soon deliver its decision on that point. "The rest is not finalized, but hopefully it will be soon, one way or another." "That doesn't mean anybody is going to accept it, but the university will be making a decision," Knoll said. Finally, in a letter accompanying the decision, National Panhellenic encouraged cooperation. "We remind all member groups that cooperation with the university and with each other and with the fraternities is the only way to make the sorority system survive on the campus," Knoll quoted.

Kennedy 3rd nominee for Supreme Court

Time right, candidate qualified

Probably not too many can get excited about the nomination of a Supreme Court Justice any more, but already, Round 3 of the battle about a nominee has started.

With Anthony Kennedy, President Ronald Reagan finally nominated the person whom most of his supporters had urged him to choose.

But Reagan first had to fall flat with Robert Bork and Douglas Ginsburg.

By now, it seems everybody just wants to get somebody nominated and appointed and to get the whole thing over with.

So yesterday, when the National Organization for Women protested the nomination of Kennedy because of his supposedly sexist and anti-women views, the reaction was rather one of weariness than of interest.

NOW is the first national organization to ask the Senate to say no to Kennedy, or to even voice protest against the new nominee.

With NOW opening the third battle against Supreme Court nominees, one can but wait to see if other organizations will join the battle or remain silent for the sake of finally finding a nominee.

At least Kennedy has one advantage -- that is his extensive record. As an appellate judge, he participated in 1,400 decisions and personally wrote more than 400 opinions, of which at least two made legal history.

Also, Kennedy has established a case-by-case approach which makes it hard to determine how he would rule on controversial issues such as abortion, religion, privacy rights, etc.

So far, Kennedy seems to be the most qualified, experienced and most flexible candidate for a Supreme Court Justice.

It would also be nice if the battle over a Supreme Court Justice could find an end so that the justices would be able to return to jurisdiction instead of media presentations.

Proud ignoramuses no solution

Editor,

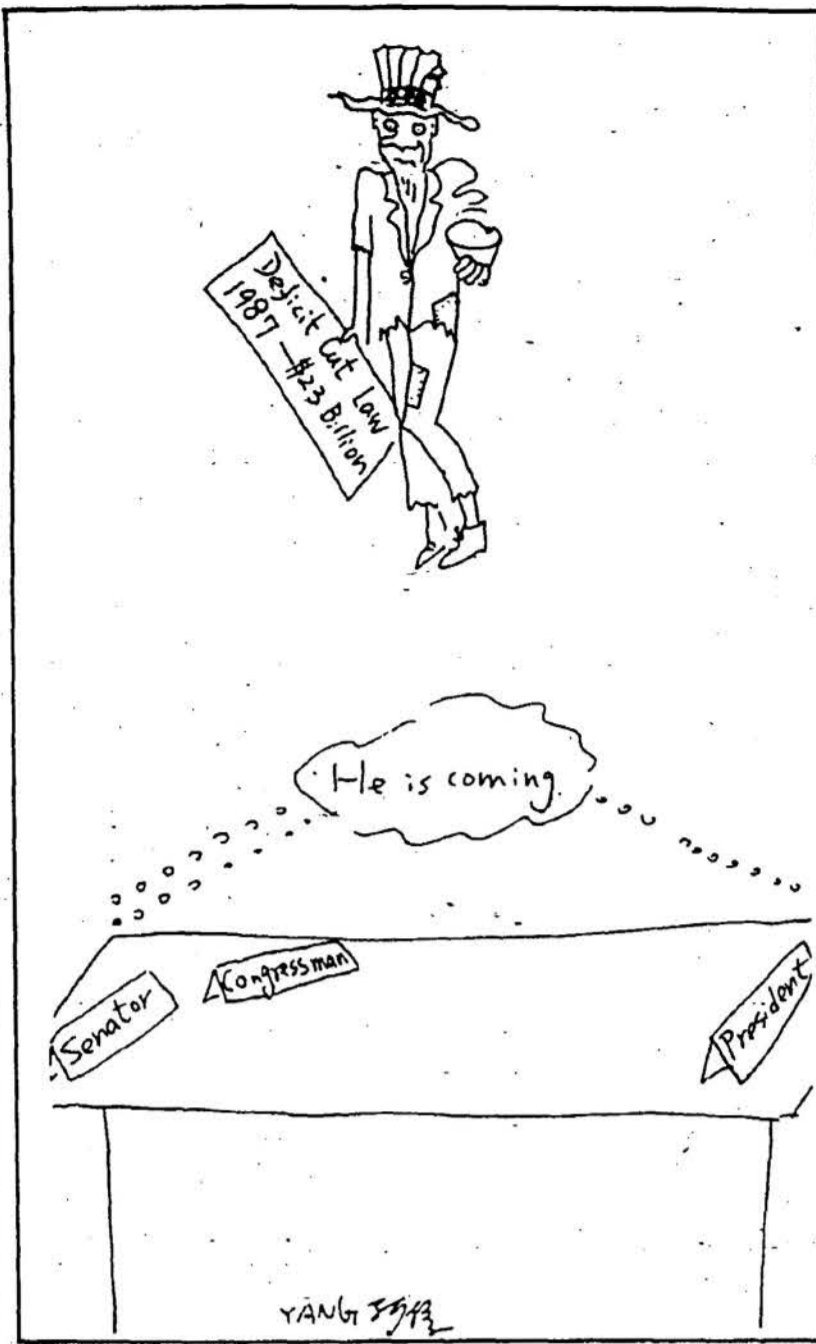

To comment on Squire Boone's letter "Uncultured of all countries, unite" opposing the cultural proposal, I find it interesting that Squire voices a choice to be ignorant, as ignorant means not instructed or informed. As an FHSU senior, Squire is no longer in that category (I would like to think).

"Cultural Ignoramuses," Squire? I believe the term you were searching for is Philistine, which would have fit nicely in your satire of the Communist Manifesto since Marx and Engels frequently used it in their writing (albeit in a different manner).

By the way, was that political/historical document a required reading in one of your FHSU classes in the past four years? Perhaps we should forcibly overthrow ALL EXISTING REQUIREMENTS and proudly graduate blissful ignoramuses from FHSU today!

Movie critics rate 'Fatal Attraction' at drive-in

"Howdy, and welcome to another one of them editions of 'At the Drive-In.' I'm Billy Joe Bookeski, movin' picture critic of the Picaayune County Weekly World and Grocery Shopper, sittin' here in the lawn chair.

"If you see the management, be sure 'n' let me know. I snuck in the trunk while the Mrs. drove the car 'in. Saves us a little cash."

"And I'm Ed Earl Balaban, here in the back of my pick-up cleanin' up my shotgun and drinkin' the six-pack I snuck in. Beats Milk Duds all to hell. I ain't no movie critic, but I'll give my opinion to anybody that'll listen."

"This here is the movie show for all of you out there who get sick and tired of them namby-pamby New York critics with the high voices tellin' you what movies is good and what movies ain't."

"Right you are, Ed Earl. And the first movie we're gonna review is that big movie 'Fatal Attraction.' We usually wouldn't get no movie this new this early, but the movie truck that goes through here hit one mother-big pothole and went into the ditch. My cousin Billy Bob, who owns the Star-Lite Drive-In, snuck in the backdoor of the truck while the driver was goin' to the gas station."

"So quick as he could, he cancelled the original show, 'Kung-Fu Stewardesses from Nympho Beach,' and put this here 'Fatal Attraction' on at the last minute."

"And we're sure glad he did, Billy Joe. Just at the same time this new Time magazine came out with this movie smack dab on the cover. They never did that with no Arnold Schwarzenegger movies."

"Anyway, Ed Earl, this is a movie that stars Michael Douglas. Remember when he used to have that talk show on every day?"

"You idiot. This here's the Michael Douglas that was in 'Streets of San Francisco.'"

"Well excuse me, Mr. Know-it-all. It also stars some woman name of Glenn Close. Now I thought it was Glenn Ford in this movie, and I was kinda disappointed. But she don't look nothin' like Glenn Ford."

"There you go again. This is the one that was in that movie with all the old music and the friends -- 'Big Chill.' That's it. But Glenn Ford, I swear. Sometimes it really shows that yer parents were first cousins."

"Can we just get on with the picture, Mr. Smart Aleck?"

"OK, OK, Michael Douglas -- and it ain't the talk show host, Smarty Pants -- is foolin' around with somebody else, and cheatin' on his wife with this Glenn Ford, uh, Close chick."

"That's it? That wouldn't even make a decent first verse of a Conway Twitty song."

"Well, you give a better explanation."

"Alright, just step aside. This here 'Fatal Attraction' just goes to show you that nobody should go around cheatin' on their wife, 'cause you're gonna be sorry. (Psst -- Ed Earl -- the only reason I'm sayin' that is 'cause the little woman is givin' me a ride home after the movie, and it's one helluva cold 12 miles back home. You tell her about the waitress at the truck stop and you're dead in your tracks, comprehend?)"

"So I give 'Fatal Attraction' a boots up."

"Me too."

"Jeez -- You always gotta agree with me, doncha? People wanna watch these shows to see both of them boys tear into each other like a pair of bobcats in a gunnysack."

"Well excuse me, Mr. Nielsen. I didn't think ratings wuz all that important at Channel 87. The test pattern's gettin' better ratings than we do, anyway."

"I don't know about you, but I'm gettin' ready for the big time."

"Now for this week's video-cass-set review -- There was nothin' new at R.J.'s Bait and Tackle Supply, Video Store and All-Nite Mini-Mart, so we just ain't gonna have a review this week."

"Stay tuned next week when we'll review whatever's playin' here at the Star-Lite Drive-In. So until next time, I'm Billy Joe Bookeski..."

"And I'm Ed Earl Balaban. And we'll see you -- At the Drive-In."

Never too late for smokers to fight addiction

Congratulations to those of you who are still smokeless today! May you be examples to others who are still contemplating their futures.

Yesterday was the 11th annual Great American Smokeout, recognized nationally as an effort to achieve a smokeless society.

While thousands of Americans gave up smoking for at least the day, thousands more celebrated personal victory anniversaries from previous smokeouts.

The American Cancer Society developed the program not only for smokers who want to quit but also for non-smokers who want to help someone else quit.

That's the part I find most frustrating -- wanting someone to quit and not knowing if I'm helping or making things worse.

I don't smoke, but I worked in an office for three years with someone who did. He tried to quit twice in that time, once seriously.

We talked about how his kids tried to get him to quit, especially his youngest daughter.

She was only 10 and could really lay the guilt on thick, saying things like, "Daddy, stop. You'll die."

So I knew that making him feel bad was not the way to help him quit.

I work in a hospital and have been involved in smoking cessation clinics where people talk about different things they have done to successfully quit.

Many of them resorted to eating when they wanted a cigarette.

Well, in case he didn't quit, I didn't want to create an oversized smoker. So I had to find something that wasn't too fattening, but would take his mind off of smoking.

Gummy Bears!

Now, don't roll your eyes. Gummy Bears are great and I could eat just as many as he could.

For about three weeks, I made numerous runs to Around the World Ice Cream where I bought Gummy Bears by the half pound (assorted flavors).

He went through the expected grouchy moods, quit drinking caffeinated coffee and threw away the ashtrays in the office.

Things seemed to be going great.

The air in the office was clear again and my clothes didn't smell like an ashtray.

Then he started leaving the office more frequently and coming back 15 minutes later.

Needless to say, a pattern was forming and the Gummy Bear runs became less and less necessary.

I really knew he had started smoking again when I found the extra trash bags in the bottom of the trash can melted together from cigarette ashes.

To prevent a fire, the ashtrays returned to the office.

But, for those three or four weeks, he gave his body some relief by not smoking.

I don't know why he started again, or that I made any difference one way or the other, but at least he knew that I cared whether or not he smoked.

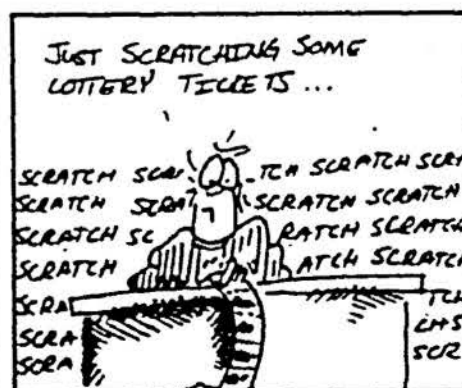

If you tried to quit yesterday and didn't make it through the whole day, at least you're trying.

It's never too late to quit!

MODEL U.N. Continued from Page 1.

Mans said the debate in the early stages of the Security Council session was slow, but that it increased as the delegates encountered topics they were familiar with.

"To be honest, we started off slowly," Mans said.

"Then we got into the topic of the Middle East, which everyone seemed to know more about. They were willing to debate a little more; that opened people up," Mans said.

Mans said that although some students were adequately prepared for the select debate, some were not ready for the responsibility.

"Some of the delegates are not quite aware of the powers they possess and their exact position on a lot of the issues.

"I can't say that they are really voting out of character, but they are not all providing the debate they should be," Mans said.

Besides the delegates in the General Assembly and the Security Council, high schools supplied students for a press corps and to serve as pages.

At one point, James Hopkins, Utica senior, who served as General Assembly Secretary, warned the delegates against abusing pages.

Jennifer Arnett, Hays High School, was one of the pages.

"Most of the messages aren't very relevant," Arnett said.

Parliamentary procedure learned in Model UN

By Kristy Love

Copy editor

More than 260 students from 20 high schools made up the delegation of the Model United Nations at Fort Hays State yesterday.

But behind the simulated activity is a campus organization that has been preparing for the Model U.N. since the beginning of the school year.

The main job Jane Costigan, one of the Model U.N. presidents, cited was organization of the FHSU staff.

FHSU students were bloc leaders for the representatives of various countries.

"We didn't have much to do besides organizing the general assembly and working on parliamentary procedure," she said.

"I had to brush up on parliamentary a little bit. I also read up on the issues they were debating."

The issues that the delegates discuss are selected by Larry Gould, Model U.N. adviser.

"Gould selects the issues from events going on in the real U.N. and what is politically relevant," Louis Furmanski, assistant professor of political science, said.

Furmanski helped with the execution of the assembly because Gould was out of town yesterday.

"Each delegate is given a handbook listing the two major issues, with about three to five pages describing them. There is also a small write-up about the security council.

"The delegates receive the handbooks in the spring so they have all summer and part of the fall to prepare," Furmanski said.

After registration and the welcome yesterday, the delegates met in their blocs, then reconvened in the general assembly.

Furmanski said the delegates covered much of the material set up for discussion.

"The Security Council got through everything it had to discuss. The general assembly was able to vote on three resolutions. One or two is doing pretty good," he said.

"The delegates got pretty excited about a resolution proposing the withdrawal of Russian troops from Afghanistan," Furmanski said.

Another group of FHSU students participated in the Model U.N. by assisting with the press corps.

The press corps was led by Ron Johnson, director of journalism.

He was assisted by students in the area of journalism.

The FHSU students are on hand to answer the questions of high school journalists who cover the event for school newspapers and yearbooks.

"This is the second year for the press corps. They are there to follow their fellow students and report what they did and how they did it.

"I think it adds a dimension of reality to it. We're really happy to have the press corps," Furmanski said.

'Turkeys' to be roasted at party

Popular vote will decide the turkeys of Fort Hays State's student body, faculty, and administration tonight at the Backdoor's Turkey Platters dance.

Designated turkeys will receive T-shirts and various other prizes.

One lucky person will receive a frozen bird to complement his Thanksgiving meal.

The Turkey Platters dance marks the first time the Backdoor will be open this semester and used as a promotion for the Backdoor on Friday nights.

"We are going to start opening the Backdoor on Friday nights and this is a teaser to see if it would even go over," Angela Johnson, extracurricular activities chairman, said.

"We've had several requests to open the Backdoor on the weekends but we are unsure of the interest," she said.

Several organizations have used the Backdoor for their own activities.

BACCHUS, for instance, sponsored a Hawaiian hula dance Wednesday night.

"We had about 18 people show up, which wasn't too bad considering the other events scheduled the same day," Sean Donahue, BACCHUS member, said.

Epsilon Pi Tau wins another 1st

By Kevin Krier

Assistant managing editor

The Epsilon Pi Tau Industrial Education fraternity is starting a mini-dynasty.

For the third time in the past year, EPT members have taken first-place honors in a competition.

Last weekend in Denver, nine students from EPT walked away with first-place honors in the manufacturing competition organized by the Technology Education Collegiate Association.

Bill Havice, assistant professor of industrial education and group sponsor, said the experience of his students paid off in Denver.

"They participated last year when they won the national competition and I think that experience helped them last weekend. They knew what to expect. In fact, we posted the second-highest score of the 10 teams that have already competed across the nation."

Each team received a set of engineering drawings and a bill of materials for the product. A time limit of four hours was allowed for each team to design, fabricate and implement a manufacturing system to produce 20 finished products.

Havice said five products were judged at random of the 20 completed products.

Each team was judged on four main points including design, system component fabrication, system output and productivity index.

Bryan Urban, president of EPT, said everybody had a hand in winning the competition.

"Some people do the drawing, some do the flow charts and others do the actual construction," Urban said. "We all felt pretty good about the way we performed in Denver."

But, the manufacturing competition was not the only area that EPT members faced.

They also won first-place honors in a live communications contest organized by TECA.

Urban said this contest utilized a T-shirt advertising the TECA products.

"We had never done anything like this before," Urban said.

"We won that category and the president of TECA said she was going to send our tape to different groups across the nation," Urban said.

"It really surprised us as to how well we did in this category since none of us had ever done much with it."

Each team received a product, service or organization description and essential marketing information to produce a 30-second videotape commercial.

Each team was judged on script layout, commercial format, set design, acting, video taping and overall "selling quality."

This was a pilot competition and many universities across the nation will view the taped commercial in preparation for the next competition in March at the National Convention for the International Technology Education Association in Norfolk, Va.

Havice said the group had a chance to work on some problem areas they encountered last year before going to Denver last weekend.

"We knew what to expect going down there and we had a chance to iron out some difficulties from last year's competition," Havice said.

"But, this really teaches the students how to work with other people."

"Our president (Urban) bowed out of the manufacturing competition so one other person could compete since eight was the maximum," Havice said.

"But, during the communication contest, another student bowed out so he (Urban) could compete in that category. It really showed how much they work together. They represented our department and Fort Hays State very well."

Besides Urban, other Fort Hays State students taking part in the competition were senior Chris Gredig, Switzerland; Darron Harms, Jetmore; Larry Wright, Hays; Nancy Kuhn, Gove; David Linn, Larned; and Jay Boley, Eskridge.

Juniors taking part in the activity included Randy Goodale, Hays; and Ron Haefner, Blaine.

PROPOSAL. Continued from Page 1.

The book sale will start January 12, 1988 in the West Hall cafeteria.

The exchange would allow students to place their books at the exchange with the price they want plus a ten percent addition to the price for handling and selling of the book. Jim Brull, administrative assistant of SGA said.

Brull said that the money made from the additional cost would be placed into a scholarship fund with the endowment association.

He said that those scholarships would be available to students who participated in the book exchange.

In other SGA business a deadline of the first Monday in December is set for any organization that would like to submit a preliminary budget and request to the allocation committee.

These will be submitted to the organizations for their final consideration before the final day of classes of the fall semester, the by-laws said.

How far would someone go to defend his principals?

How can one determine what is just and unjust in a world full of confusion?

Starting last night and continuing on through this weekend, Fort Hays State's theater department is featuring its second show this semester, "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," which addresses these issues and many more.

The play, directed by Charles Eveans, professor of communication, details the events surrounding Henry David Thoreau's refusal to pay taxes which he felt supported his country's involvement in the Mexican-American war and of the night he spent in jail because of it.

Thoreau, one of the greatest American transcendental writers of the 19th century, is probably best known for his book "Walden."

The story told on stage is one of flashbacks and dreams, including his stay on Walden Pond in Massachusetts, his days of teaching in Concord, his relationship with his brother John and his admiration for his mentor, Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The use of lighting and sound effects is some of the most extensive ever seen and heard at FHSU. When mixed with smoke during Thoreau's war nightmare at the end, the result is nothing short of eerie.

Some of the cast members include Clifton Riggs Jr., Hays freshman, as Henry; Bruce Bardwell, Hays graduate student, as Waldo; James Smith, Buhler freshman, as John; Scott Parrott, Healy freshman, as Bailey; and Kelli Stegman, Ellis senior, as Ellen.

The play is scheduled for 8 p.m. today and tomorrow and 2 p.m. Sunday.

Tickets, on sale at the box office, are $4 for adults and $3 for students and senior citizens.

International student publishes first poem in anthology

By Kevin Krier

Assistant managing editor

The last thing on the mind of Kintus Ben was winning a poetry contest.

Ben, an international student from Amalgbo, Nigeria, sent in a poem Oct. 31 to the National Collegiate Poetry Contest but really had no designs on winning the contest.

"I just thought I would give it a shot and see what happens," Ben said.

"Bob Maxwell (Ben's English instructor) helped me quite a bit and he encouraged me."

Ben heard back from the contest organization Wednesday morning when they notified him via mail he had been chosen from thousands of contest entries to have his poem published.

Maxwell was as surprised as anyone when Ben told him Wednesday that he had won the contest.

"I'm very pleased for him. I thought he had as good a shot as anyone else," Maxwell said.

"He's very deserving of the award, and I think it was time well spent."

Ben's poem, "Hail Biafra," will be published in the middle of February in "American Collegiate Poets."

Ben was shocked when he found out his poem had been chosen.

"I didn't know whether to cry or just what to do," Ben said.

"I was so excited I immediately rushed to Mr. Maxwell's office to tell him the good news. It was really his encouragement that helped me write the poem."

Ben's interest in poetry started when he was in high school and his interest has never waned.

"I have always been interested in writing," Ben said.

"Everyone has given me encouragement and told me to give it a shot."

Maxwell was somewhat surprised when he found out that Ben wrote poetry.

"Frankly, I never had an inkling that he wrote poetry," Maxwell said.

"I have had him for a couple of classes and he seemed to get along well in my classes. But, I didn't think of him as a writer of poetry."

Maxwell downplayed his role in helping Ben write the award-winning poem.

"I just offered him moral support and suggested a few things such as word phrase punctuation," Maxwell said.

"I didn't know whether to cry or just what to do."

- Kintus Ben

"I didn't think he wanted the poem to be a stream of consciousness."

"I'm not a poetry critic. Jeff Boyer is our poetry expert but Ben wasn't familiar with him and didn't have him in any classes," Maxwell said.

"He accepted criticism very well and we did what we could to fix the poem grammatically."

The poem "Hail Biafra" took Ben approximately 90 minutes to write, but he said he gets many of his ideas early in the morning.

"Many of my ideas for poetry come from my frustrations. Sometimes when I can't sleep, I wake up at 4 a.m. and think of some good ideas," Ben said.

"That is when my ideas come together and I start writing them down."

Ben is hoping this publication will be his break and send him to bigger and better things.

"This will give me confidence. No matter what I do the rest of my time, I will always be able to say I had this poem published," Ben said.

"I can look back at this and know that I am good enough to write. But, this was really the last thing I expected."

Hunting safety course offered

The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks is offering a hunter safety course this weekend.

This course is the last one of the four safety courses offered each year in Hays.

"Usually, quite a few Fort Hays State students attend," Ron Little, regional wildlife supervisor, said. "They need to."

The course is required for anyone wishing to hunt in Kansas and who was born on or after July 1, 1957.

Hunters need the class to be able to buy a hunting license. The course does not have to be renewed, Little said.

The department of wildlife and parks has been conducting these courses since 1973.

"Usually, we have a turnout of about 30 to 40 people," Little said.

Participants do not need to bring any hunting equipment, Little said.

"We have all the materials," he said. "All they need to do is to show up at 9 a.m. tomorrow."

Hunter safety is the main emphasis of the course, but during the 10 hours of instruction, a variety of topics will be covered.

Jack Jackson, assistant professor of journalism, was one of the first volunteers to be an instructor when the courses became mandatory in the early 1970s.

For a certain period of time, Jackson worked as master instructor for Ellis County, coordinating the organization of hunting safety courses.

A member of the National Rifle Association, Jackson will teach courses on the use of rifles as part of the hunters safety course tomorrow.

Topics included are the use of firearms, how to handle guns, a course on first aid, hunter ethics, alcohol and drugs, boating and bow hunting safety, wildlife conservation and hunting laws.

The course, which is free, will begin at 9 a.m. and run until 4:30 p.m. tomorrow at the Army Reserve Center on south Main Street.

The conclusion of the course will begin at 1 p.m. Sunday.

All they need is love of Beatles fans

The audience had a ticket to ride back to 1964, when the Beatles imitators performed at the Hays High 12th Street Auditorium Wednesday night. And by the crowd reaction, the more than 600 people loved them.

Yeah, yeah, yeah.

The four-man imitators of John, Paul, George and Ringo held the audience by the hand and made them get back to the early years of the Fab Four.

Greg George, as Ringo Starr, said that 1964 received the help they needed from seeing tapes of the Beatles' performances on the Ed Sullivan show, as well as concert footage from performances in Miami and Washington, D.C.

George said it took more than a hard day's night for the group to work on mimicking the Beatles.

"We just watched it over and over and over and over again," George said.

"It was almost as though we had it programmed down to their movements, positioning and style."

"It was a study just like a theatrical study of a character. If you work enough, you can be that person," George said.

1964 got their start in Ohio four years ago.

George said that he and the original player who impersonated George Harrison were in one group. Gary Grimes, who plays Paul McCartney, and Mark Benson, who plays John Lennon, were in another group.

"We just were kind of all kicking around town," George said. "We decided to do something with a little more focus; do more professionally."

"We all grew up with the Beatles, so it was kind of a natural attraction."

Bringing back the music of yesterday was not an easy task. All of the equipment on the stage were replicas of the originals, even the same brands and makes.

From the response of the crowd, they could listen to the Beatles music eight days a week.

"It usually gets a good response," George said.

"There's a need for playing Beatles music in this country. People really yearn for their music."

The audience who wants to twist and shout with the group is greater than the time 1964 can supply, George said.

"As of late, we've had a whole lot of college venues," George said.

The group has three different agents, one for the college circuit, one for Canadian performances and one for other professional engagements.

George said that the group has to turn down 60 percent of the requests to perform due to time limitations.

After a performance at a college programming convention, they received many more requests.

George said that although getting to a performance -- where baby, they can drive their car -- was tiring, the energetic performance was not.

Twenty days or more per month on the road could make some performers think they should have known better, but not George.

"Beatles music is classical enough that it doesn't get tiring," George said.

"But like any entertainers, it's the communication with the crowd that feeds us."

George said that none of the three remaining Beatles have seen a performance of 1964, but Harrison's sister and the president of Apple Records, the label the Beatles founded, were impressed.

"They loved it. They all give us high praise and asked us to keep it alive," George said.

The newest song the group performed was "Yellow Submarine," which reached No. 2 in August, 1966. George said that the group may try later to do some of the newer material, including songs from "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band."

"We have thought about it," George said. "Possibly next year. We're trying to focus on the early years. They seem to be the most requested."

"They are the easiest to play. They played live without tampering with reality, and using tapes or singing or people playing backstage."

"What we do is what they did live on stage. That's what we're trying to show people."

'Raising Arizona' features hilarious scenes at relentless pace, treat for home viewers

OK, listen up. Once upon a time there was this guy, Hi McDunnough, a repeat offender of convenience store holdups. But the authorities couldn't hold him since he never used live ammo in his gun.

As a result, Hi found himself stuck in a rut, but it was out of these repeated returns to jail that he met and fell in love with Ed, the lady cop who always photographed him and took his fingerprints.

After marrying and settling down in a ramshackle trailer in the middle of the Arizona desert, Hi and Ed decided to have a "critter," but were distraught when they found that Ed was "barren," despite Hi's claim that she was "as fertile as the Tennessee River valley."

Given Hi's illustrious criminal record, they couldn't adopt, so they decided to do the next best thing. They stole a baby from Nathan Arizona, the Unpainted Furniture King, a recent father of quintuplets.

If you've already seen "Raising Arizona," chances are you remember what happens after that, but if you haven't, suffice it to say that it is some of the funniest stuff you're likely to see for a long time.

"Raising Arizona," the second film from writer/director brothers Joel and Ethan Coen, is now available on videocassette for home viewing.

And it is hilarious. Starring Nicolas Cage as Hi and Holly Hunter as Ed, "Raising Arizona" is a real treat.

From the pre-title introduction to the end credits, the film's pace is relentless, throwing in so many outrageously wacky twists and turns that you can't possibly catch it all in one viewing. There is a kidnapping. There is a jail break. There is another kidnapping. There is a bank heist. There is screaming. There is the Lone Biker of the Apocalypse. And there is a holdup for Huggles diapers, culminating in one of the truly classic chase scenes of all time. When watching this movie, you just know that the people who made it had a ball doing so.

Do yourself a favor and rent "Raising Arizona" tonight. I guarantee you'll be glad you did.

Tigers begin season in Pepsi Tip-Off Tournament slated for this weekend

By Mike Marzoff
Sports editor

The time has arrived for the Fort Hays State basketball team to lace up the sneakers and take to the court for real.

A little more than a month after the first midnight practice, the Tigers will finally be able to see if they are deserving of the top ranking they received in the pre-season NIAA polls.

Tonight and tomorrow, FHSU will play host to the Pepsi Tip-Off Tournament.

Southwestern University (Texas) and Oklahoma City University will tip things off tonight at 6 p.m.

That game will be followed by the Tigers against Concordia Lutheran College (Texas).

According to Head Coach Bill Morse, the Tigers are not performing as well as he had hoped at this point.

"I am not satisfied with the progress of the team so far, but then again, I don't think any coach is ever satisfied," Morse said.

"We haven't been playing good in practice, but I'm hoping that will change."

"I'm hoping the strange competition for the first time will bring out the best of them. In that respect we could play well. We could also play very badly."

While FHSU has received high expectations in the pre-season, they will be starting three players who did not see action for the Tigers last season.

Only Mark Harris, 6-2 senior, and Thomas Hardnett, 6-9 senior, return to the Tigers starting line-up in the opening contest.

Harris was the leading scorer for the Tigers last season, averaging 23.3 points a game.

Hardnett also averaged double figures for FHSU last season, at 11.2.

Mike Miller, 6-6 junior, who was second on the Tigers in scoring last season, has a foot injury, but should see action.

Cedric Williams, 6-6 sophomore, returns to the Tigers starting line-up after sitting out last season.

Williams averaged 12.5 points a game two seasons ago for FHSU.

Two new faces in the starting five are Ronnie Thompkins and Shaun Manning.

Thompkins was a junior college All-American last season at Mott Community College in Michigan.

Manning comes to FHSU, also as a junior college All-American last season at Grossmont College in California.

The Stags of Concordia

Lutheran College posted a 13-17 record last season.

The first round opponent for FHSU will tote an 0-4 mark into the Pepsi Challenge, but Morse is not sure they are all that bad.

"They had high expectations as the season began, but have been hurt," Morse said. "They have a lot of injuries and so forth and I don't know how healthy they will be."

Southwestern and Oklahoma City begin the tournament with high expectations, also.

Oklahoma City was rated at the top of the NIAA poll for nearly all of last season.

The Chiefs dropped their first game of the season in the opening round of the National Tournament last season, finishing at 34-1.

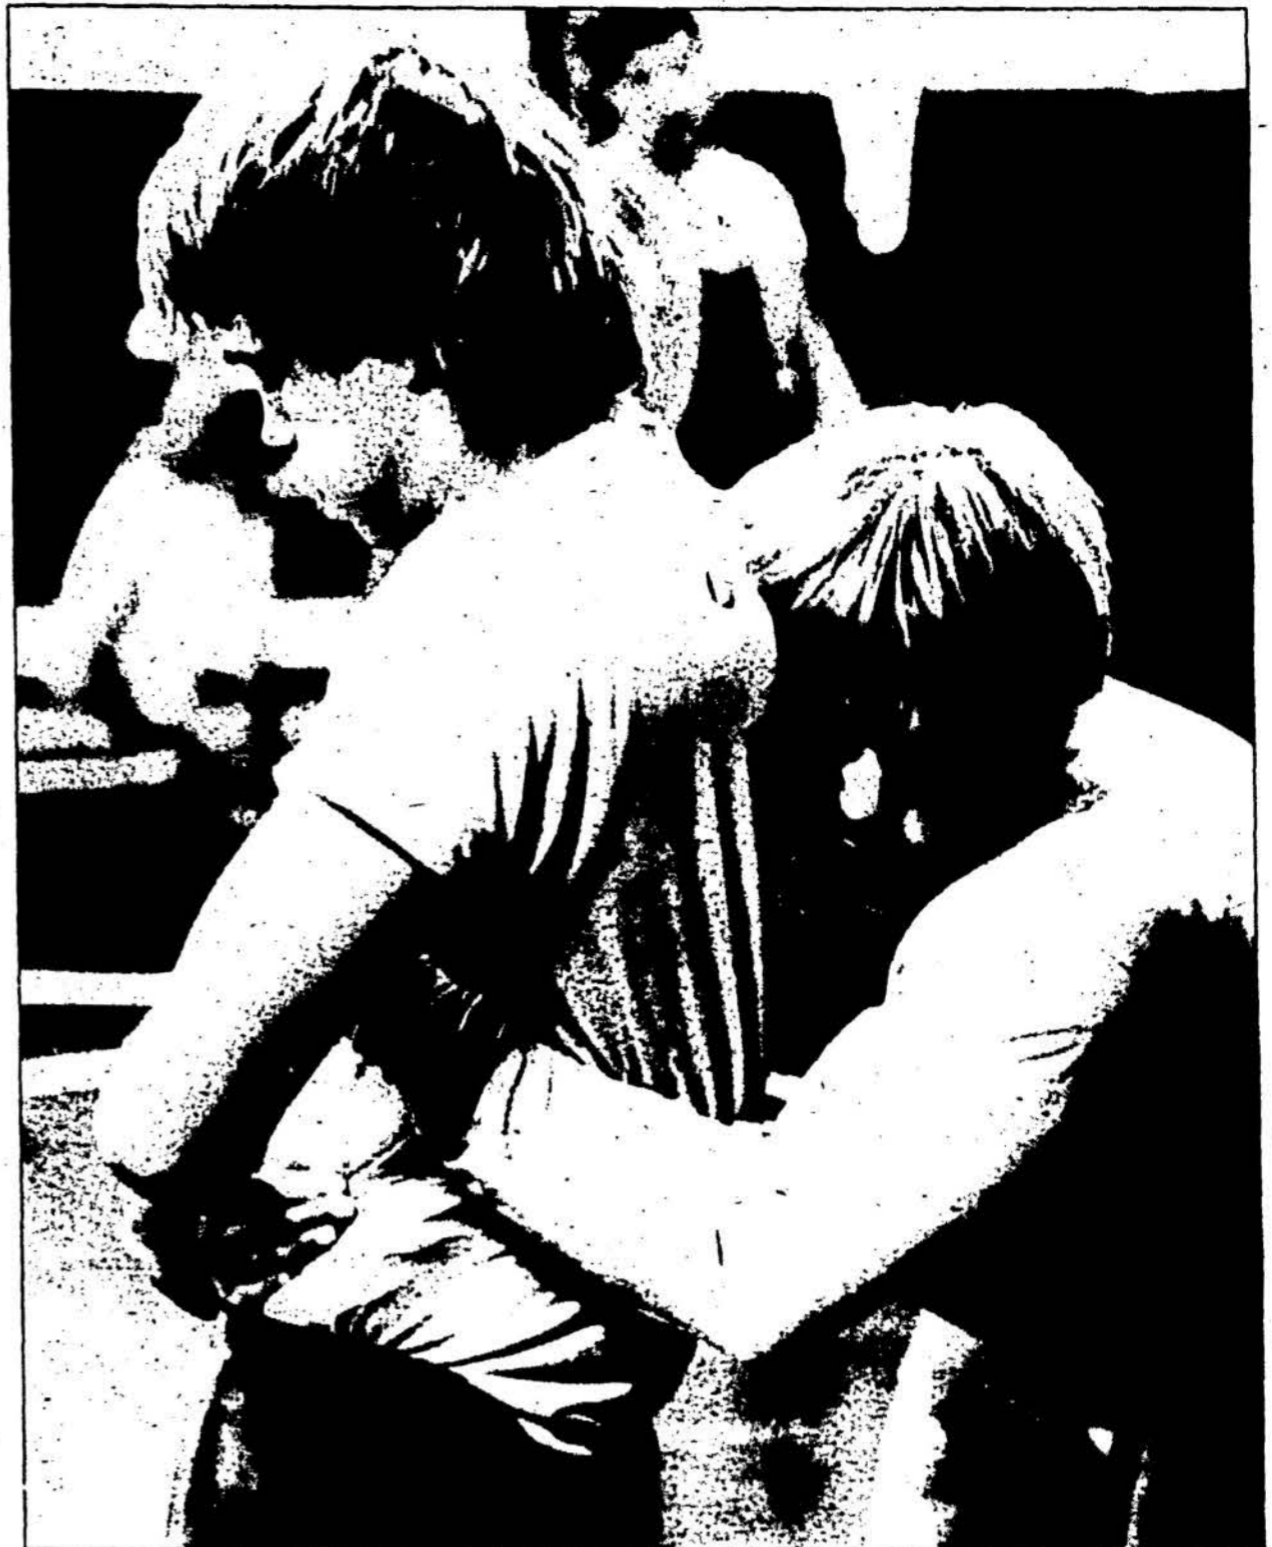

This season they are 4-0.

Southwestern posted a 23-11 record last season, and Morse says word is they have improved.

"The rumor was Southwestern was loaded, but they haven't played any games yet," Morse said.

"Word in Texas is they have great players; whether they are going to be around for these games I don't know."

The two losers in the opening round will square off at 6 p.m. Saturday with the winners facing each other at 8 p.m.

Lady Tigers open season on the road

By Eric Hodson
Assistant sports editor

Last year, the Friends University women's basketball team defeated the Lady Tigers on their home court.

This year, the Fort Hays State women's team hopes to return the favor as they travel to Wichita Saturday.

Head Coach John Klein said that Friends will be a stronger team than last year due to the recruiting they did in the off-season.

"They will be one of the toughest teams in our district this year," Klein said.

Klein expects Friends to try to use their quickness and good shooting to score on fast break opportunities and from the outside.

"Their inside game might not be as strong as some teams we face in the conference, but they have some good outside shooters," he said.

Klein said that defensively Friends will use a combination of pressure defenses to get their transition game going.

"They have good quickness and should be strong defensively," he said.

The Lady Tigers will counter offensively with their inside game, Klein said.

"They might have an edge with their overall quickness, but we will have the edge on them with the inside game," Klein said.

Players for the Falcons that

Klein said his team will have to stop are Robin Garrig, 5-8; Jennifer Hopkins, 5-7; and Amy Rogers, 6-1.

Another key to the game Klein said will be for the Lady Tigers to control the ball and the tempo of the game.

"We will have to eliminate the turnovers and not give the ball up. Most of the time we should match up pretty well with them."

"We can't let them control the game. They will be playing at home, which is always a n advantage," Klein said.

Klein said that he has mixed feelings about playing the first game of the season on the road.

"It's not always good, but taking a look at the early part of the schedule, we play eight games before the Christmas break. Five of them are at home and that's really good. I'd rather open at home, but you can't always control that," Klein said.

Other than several minor injuries, Klein said his team is healthy and ready to play.

"We've had a lot of minor injuries, but nothing that has knocked anyone out for a long time. We're starting to come around now," he said.

Chris Biser, 6-0 center; Penny Fischer, 5-9 forward; and Tara Nelson, 5-8 forward, are the probable starters inside for the Lady Tigers.

Outside the paint, Dianne Dugan, 5-8 guard, and Christina Heier, 5-6 guard, are the probable starters to run the offense.

Klein said he expects the game to be a good battle and that his team will have to be aggressive to win.

"We'll have to go in there and play hard to win. If the kids go after it we'll do all right. It should be a good game," Klein said.

The contest gets underway at 7 p.m.

Wrestlers to compete at Nebraska-Omaha open

By Heather Anderson
Staff writer

The Fort Hays State wrestling team will travel to Omaha, Neb., tomorrow to compete in the University of Nebraska-Omaha open tournament.

Although the whole team will make the trip, the competition will be entirely on an individual basis.

"This tournament will basically help us get tuned up and let us get our starting lineups for the second semester," Head Coach Wayne Petterson said.

Several members of the FHSU wrestling program will compete in the tournament.

Billy Johnson, who won the 118-pound division at the tournament last year, will again compete in that weight division.

Greg Pfannenstiel, a qualifier for the national tournament last season, will also make the trip. Pfannenstiel will wrestle at 126.

Wrestling at 134 will be three-time Kansas high school state champion West Harding, making his FHSU debut.

Junior college All-Americans Eric Napier and Mike Nansel will also make their debut as Tiger wrestlers in the UNO meet.

Napier will wrestle at 167 while Nansel will compete at 177.

Several Tigers will wrestle at 142, 150 and 158.

They include Vincent Cortez, Mike Ellengood, Shawn Simons, Craig Goodman, Tom Milsap, Mike Nansel and Greg Dixon.

Gaven Ludlow will compete as a heavyweight.

Oklahoma, Nebraska atop bizarre football rankings

What would college football be without polls?

Well, here is the Top 20, according to the TED wire service, and why I rated them that way.

1. Oklahoma -- Why not? It is the best team; there is no doubt about it.
2. Nebraska -- It is great, also, but not great enough. The outcome will definitely be decided following the big game.
3. Notre Dame -- The way the Irish have been destroying top-ranked opponents, they deserve a high ranking.
4. Oklahoma State -- There should be another Big Eight team in the Top 5, and the Cowboys are the only team besides OU and Nebraska that deserves it.
5. Florida State -- It is a powerful team. Thank God for steroids.
6. UCLA -- Kenny Norton Jr. displays the same knock-out punch that his father had. Although Gaston Green is a fragile running back, he is as quick as a cat and has breakaway speed.
7. Michigan State -- Lorenzo White.
8. Kansas City Chiefs -- Well, they need to be noted in some way, don't you think?
9. Louisiana State -- The Bayou Bengals have always been a consistently good team. They should go to the Sugar Bowl once again.
10. Arkansas -- It has dominated the Southwestern Conference this year. That is a tough league to play in, and the

19. Iowa -- I like midwestern teams. OK?

20. Kansas -- It won one game and tied K-State. Besides that, its basketball team is good enough to be ranked in football.

That's it. Who are going to be the Most Valuable Players for this season?

Offense: Tim Brown of Notre Dame. He does everything thing for the Irish and does it well. He is at the top of my list for the Heisman Trophy.

Defense: Chris Spielman of Ohio State. He's strong, quick, smart and mean. Those are the qualities of a great linebacker. He is also a great leader for the Buckeyes and will go very high in next year's draft.
