Women best in Jell-O tussle

By BECKY OBORNY
Staff Writer

The women beat the men at the West Hall beach blowout Friday night.

Renee Peroutek, Esbon freshman, and Theresa Tomanek, Salina freshman, won the Jell-O wrestling tournament sponsored by West Hall council. As winners of the event, they split the $25 award.

Even before the official wrestling matches began, Jell-O residents were in the Jell-O, practicing wrestling moves and holds.

Some would get out, oozing with Jell-O, and attempt to give a hug to their friends who were standing around to watch.

One resident, sitting in the midst of an inch-thick layer of red Jell-O, said it was cold, but that did not stop him from grabbing the person next to him and starting his own match.

The registration table was surrounded by men who wanted to sign up for the wrestling matches.

At 9 p.m., the referee stepped into the pit to announce the rules, and the main event of the blowout began.

Spectators stood around the pit, leaving the hot tub vacant. The participants of each match were determined by drawing two names.

There were no weight divisions, so it was possible for a 150-pound person to contend with someone weighing 200 pounds.

As the first two competitors stepped into the pit, two other residents stepped in to play the part of their coaches.

The referee blew the whistle, and the two wrestlers attempted to take the other one down and hold him there or obtain the most points.

People around the outside yelled pointers and words of encouragement to the wrestlers, who were struggling to get a grip on their opponents.

Jell-O was flying everywhere, covering anything within 10 feet of the pit.

Laughing, the wrestlers helped each other out of the pit after the winner had been determined.

Eighteen men competed. Some were previous wrestlers. Others were not.

Chris Capetini, Golden, Colo., freshman, won the male competition.

The first and only round of women's competition, however, took longer to get started.

Since no women had signed up, two female wrestlers had to be coaxed into the pit.

After a few minutes of chanting and pushing, Peroutek and Tomanek entered the pit.

Two more women could not be persuaded to participate in a second round.

No one would volunteer even after the disc jockey offered to personally pay any woman $25 to get in the pit.

After the wrestling had gotten under way, people who walked around the pit were finding it difficult to remain on their feet.

They slipped frequently and grabbed onto friends or the wall to keep from falling.

Many spectators and wrestlers enjoyed the Jell-O wrestling.

"I think it's great. I wish they'd get more girls in the Jell-O," Roger Kaiser, Kingman freshman, said.

"You had to use red Jell-O," a wrestler said after winning his first match. "I'll be stained for the rest of my life, and I've only wrestled once."

People attending were able to listen to Top 40 rock 'n' roll music in the background, frolic in the hot tub and visit the refreshment table for fresh fruit, cheese and crackers, and fruit punch.

Mark Chesterman, Beaver City junior, who was in charge of the registration table, will remember the blowout for a while.

"It was a pretty wild adventure," he said.

If hall council sponsored another beach party, Chesterman said he would help on one condition.

"It's not indoors."

Tiger Tots tour fire station for first time

By MADELINE HOLLER
Staff Writer

A special group of students toured the city firehouse yesterday.

For some, it was the first time. The students are children from two to five years old that attend the Fort Hays State Tiger Tots nursery and day care center located in Rarick Hall.

"The kids seemed to get a whole lot out of the trip to the fire station," Laura Schoaff, director of the Tiger Tots, said.

The firehouse tour is an annual tour that is followed with a week-long look at fire prevention and safety hazards.

"Now, since they've seen it, they seem to be a lot more interested in what we'll be reviewing this week," she said.

Students learn, for example, that they should remain near the ground when threatened by a fire and that action should be taken immediately if there is a fire.

The firemen say that a lot of times, during fires, the students will actually hide from the fire. But if we allow them to become more aware of fires, they will understand them better and know what to do," Schoaff said.

During the tour, students saw the firemen's living quarters, the layout of the fire station and were allowed to touch the firemen's uniforms to feel the actual weight and texture of the coats and boots.

"We even got to go on the Students asked to stand-up for rights

By DAVID BURKE
Managing Editor

The manager of a Hays tavern wants Fort Hays State students under age 21 to stand up for their rights.

Gayleen Shaver, manager of Judge McGreevy's Suds 'n' Snacks, 1107 Vine St., has organized a group of 10 Hays tavern owners. The group will appear before the Hays City Commission in its meeting on Thursday.

The commission passed laws last fall making it against ordinances for those under 21 to enter one of the 3.2 taverns.

"Some of the city commissioners don't feel they should be in at all if they're under 21, and we don't agree with that at all," Shaver said. The last city commission meeting we had was on a Monday about three weeks ago, and one of the city commissioners asked us if we lose much business not letting the minors in if we can't sell them beer.

"Our reply to that was yes, of course, because underage people have friends that they come in with who are of age, and if they can't come in, then the whole group won't come in, and we lose business that way," Shaver said.

"Another example is someone who is 21 having a date who is under 21, and we can't allow those people," she said.

"These kids are really getting rooked by not being able to drink to begin with. Everybody disagrees with that law. If you're old enough to vote and old enough to get married and have children but yet the country doesn't believe you're old enough to decide whether or not you're even responsible to know whether or not you want to drink. That's wrong."

"Now some of the commissioners are saying you're not responsible to enter the places and that's not right. We want to put an end to that," Shaver said.

Shaver said she has sent letters to FHSU President Edward Hammond; Bill Jellison, vice president for student affairs; Dorothy Knoll, associate dean of students; and Robert Van Poppel, director of athletics.

"They should have an interest in this issue because 75 percent of their college kids are under age, and if they were there we would get some input from them and get some viewpoints on it," Shaver said. "I'm sure the city commissioners, the police department and the bar owners themselves would really like to hear what they have to say."

Shaver said she wished the underage students would attend as well.

"It's also important to have students who are there that are underage so that they can hear from them," she said. "Another thing the city commissioners said at that meeting Monday was that 'Well, it's obvious nobody's interested in this' because there were only three representatives there. Well, that's going to change Thursday. We're going to show them just how many people are interested in these issues."

"We're wanting to let the kids be aware of what's going on," Shaver said. "They should have a

Athletics needs parity

This Thursday, the Student Government Association will vote on an unprecedented three-part allocations bill which will include the budgeting of $212,344 for athletics.

This amount is nearly double this year's allocations amount of $109,000.

Although this may seem like a steep amount to pay, it represents something that many people in the university have been steadily pushing for in the last few years: parity with FHSU's sister schools.

Student fees going toward athletics are $225,000 at Pittsburg State University (where they are also seeking an increase) and $211,114 at Emporia State University.

Even though the thought of the steep increase seems alarming at first, it is also reasonable.

Through studies of faculty salaries, facilities and equipment in the Margin of Excellence, we have learned that there are many ways in which we trail universities such as Emporia State and Pittsburg State.

So why shouldn't the same hold true for athletics?

The trade-off seems fair: for more of FHSU students' money, FHSU students get more representatives on the Athletic Association Board. There would be four members instead of the present two.

In addition, there would be an annual evaluation of the athletic department by the allocations committee.

We would recommend to the SGA that the increase be approved, and a close monitoring kept on the athletic department -- to keep the best interests of the students' money at heart.

Letters

Students help support Olympics

To the editor,

I am writing this letter in regard to the publicity the Fort Hays State students are receiving at the university basketball games. I am a graduate of FHSU and the basketball games are some of my most cherished memories. I have not had an opportunity to watch the basketball team this season, therefore my information on the student body's actions is solely dependent on hear-say and the media.

Not every student can be in the limelight, such as a university athlete or student body president. However, every student can be active in supporting their school, and athletic competition seems to be a magnet for school unification.

But, too often in this life, a crowd is often represented (or should that be misrepresented?) by a very small segment of the group. I believe such is the case for this, and the student body is taking the heat for a very small group's actions.

It is our hope to turn the table and let the public know what the student body does for over 1,000 Kansans.

March 24-26, the Kansas Special Olympics state basketball tournament will be at FHSU.

This will be the twelfth year for Hays to host the tournament, and without the support of the community and the university, the tournament would not be possible.

Many of the students and faculty of FHSU have been preparing for months for the tournament, and many more will volunteer their time the weekend of March 24-26. Many of these volunteers are the same people who sit in the student section at university basketball games. However, at the games they are overshadowed by a few peers.

I hope many of you will take the opportunity to come watch the students at the Special Olympics basketball games. Believe me, these are the actions that are meant to be monitored.

Grandparents provide love, inspiration during hardships

"Henry David Summers wedded to Alice Ruth Elder, March 27, 1929."

This fact, which is stated in embroidery at their house, is a big part of my life.

On March 27, my grandparents will be celebrating 59 years together in marriage.

Grandpa was born July 11, 1901, in Indiana. His parents moved to Kansas in 1906 and later set up a homestead northwest of Lakin in Kearny County.

Grandma was born on March 28, 1911. She was born and raised in southwest Kansas.

After their wedding, my grandparents set up their own farm in Kearny County, where they stayed until 1945.

In 1945, they moved back to the homestead where grandpa grew-up and continued to raise their nine children.

In 1972, after my father was transferred by the railroad from Leoti to St. Joseph, Mo., grandma and grandpa moved into our house in Leoti.

They have lived there since then, and now that is where I go home to.

In addition to their nine children, they have 26 grandchildren and 14 great-grandchildren. Believe me, the picture case is totally full.

I have family in New Jersey, Texas, Louisiana (Mom and Dad), Oklahoma, Utah, Virginia and Kansas. It takes more than a two-week vacation to try to see all of our family.

During the summers, grandma and grandpa still keep a garden. Grandpa likes to work out the weeds with the hoe.

When he still lived on the farm, some of the grandchildren got to go out and do some hoeing with him.

At the time, I did not think of it as a big deal, and it was too hot to be doing that anyway. But now that I look back, it was a great experience and probably one of the best times to spend with grandpa.

Grandma still does those things that farm women are known for, like canning vegetables and hanging clothes on the line. She bakes the best homemade bread that I've ever tasted.

These two people have been the inspiration of my life. They have struggled through the bad, and held together through the good.

When two people can stay together 59 years with all of their ups and downs, it helps me go through four years of college.

Grandma still goes to all of the home ball games. When she has family playing, she will be there to watch them play no matter how bad the weather is.

Grandma and grandpa have also picked up more family in the past few years.

My aunt and uncle, who live in Garden City, are foster parents to some members of the Garden City Community College basketball team.

Keith Smart is probably the most well known of these. Smart shot the game-winning basket for the University of Indiana Hoosiers in the 1987 NCAA championship game.

Every time Indiana plays on television, grandma is glued to the set. It is enjoyable watching her get so excited about basketball.

Smart and the other foster children from GCCC refer to my grandparents as I do, grandma and grandpa. It puts another smile on their faces.

There is no way in this world that I will ever be able to repay them for what they have done for me. I only wish that I could.

Car provides sanctuary for long trip home

He was driving the familiar stretch of road home for spring break, and, with the exception of the faceless singer fading in and out between the steady bursts of static on the radio, he was alone.

Stretching across the torn, vinyl seat as he delicately balanced the steering wheel with his left hand, Tommy cranked his far window down to let in a steady stream of wind whipping through his hair and whistling in his ears.

This was all right, he had to admit to himself.

Even the outside world flying by him as if it were a thing alive didn't seem to leave that much of an impression on him. The weight of his world, at that moment in time, existed solely in the shape of his car.

That was it.

There was no room for reading assignments and algebra assignments and paper assignments. It was a small car, and the only things he allowed inside with him were those things that would fit in the back seat.

He leaned back and allowed the car to take control of its own course. It sped like an arrow across the thin stretch of pavement, cutting through the hills -- up, above and around them -- with the ease and assuredness of one who had traveled the road several times before.

Tommy had to smile, thinking of all those who thought western Kansas was nothing but a flat stretch of dirt, worn down by the thundering hooves of yesteryear. Okay, so there weren't the mountainous ranges that one saw on a postcard from the Rockies or on the old "Gunsmoke" reruns, but they would do Tommy just fine.

At least for now, anyway.

A lot of his friends had told Tommy of their big plans for the following week. Some of them were going to Breckenridge or Keystone or Winter Park to "check out the powder." Others were heading south to Padre to check out some other things.

Whether stocking up on skiing apparel or taking account of the new swimsuit fashions, everyone was planning something big and momentous, it seemed.

He had watched as they drew up their blueprints and pooled their resources in preparation for the upcoming Big Event, and all the while, he constantly reassured them that he had plans of his own, and no, he didn't want to go with them.

For some reason or other it had been hard for them to believe that.

Because Tommy was just going home. He was just going to travel the same road he always traveled, and see the same sights he always saw whenever he made his way home for the weekends.

He was probably just going to sit around and spend his time doing not much of anything, unless he actually planned on doing some work.

Yeah, they could imagine him sitting on the back step, playing with his dog Rusty, or even just staring off at the fields across the narrow dirt road, thinking of ... things.

Tommy smiled as he glanced into his rear-view mirror at the world disappearing behind him.

He was going home for spring break.

And that was all right.

Horse racing has its own language; gambling proves to be risky venture

Spring break is so close, I can almost taste it.

But for me, I celebrated my vacation last weekend.

I won't be attending classes next week. Instead, I will join the ranks of college students who spend their vacations working.

So when one of my friends called me Saturday afternoon and wanted my boyfriend and two other friends to go with him to the horse races in Grand Island, Neb., on Sunday, I was more than ready to go.

Although I have been known to place a bet on a football or basketball game, and I sometimes sit in on a hand or two of seven card stud poker with my dad and brothers, gambling was a foreign language to me.

Today I speak the language fluently.

Heistantly, I sat out the first race and just watched how things were done.

First, we bought two tip sheets on the supposedly top winners in each of the 10 races for the day.

Then, we checked the Fonner Park Official Program to find out the names of the horses, their color and number, owner, trainer, jockey and finally how the track handicapper had picked them to finish.

We compared the speculative finishes of all three and judged them against the odds on the television.

Finally, about seven minutes to posting time (when you pay your money) we saw the horses and jockeys come out onto the track, making their way to the starting gate. This is when I usually made my choice on which horse and jockey to place my bet on.

I chose on looks. Usually the prettier the horse, the more probable I was to place a wager on it.

By the second race, I was ready to go try my hand.

After agonizing over each entry, I chose No. 7, Retac Red, as my choice.

Clutching my money, I made my way up to the ABC window (where you make your wager).

When making a wager, it's nearly impossible to make a mistake, unless you can't read, because there are signs posted everywhere explaining how to put your money down.

I read them so many times that I can recite them forward, backward and any other way imaginable.

1. Give the clerk the amount of money you want to wager. I handed over $2.

2. Tell the clerk how you want to wager. This is the tricky part.

This takes explaining. There are three choices on how your horse will come in -- win, place, or show. Win means your horse must come in first; place says it can come in first or second and show says your horse must place in any of the top three positions for you to win.

I chose place. When in doubt, go for the middle-of-the-road approach. Retac Red could come in first or second, and I would be a winner.

3. Give the clerk the number of the horse that you want to wager on. I told her No. 7, Lucky No. 7.

I sat back and waited for the race. It took a little more than a minute to run. Retac Red placed third. I lost. It was exciting though.

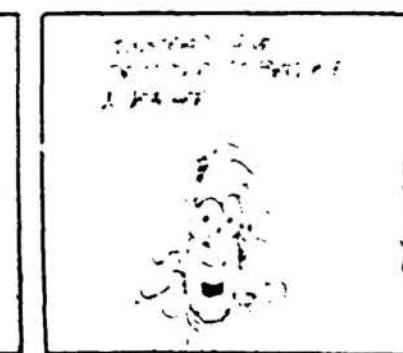

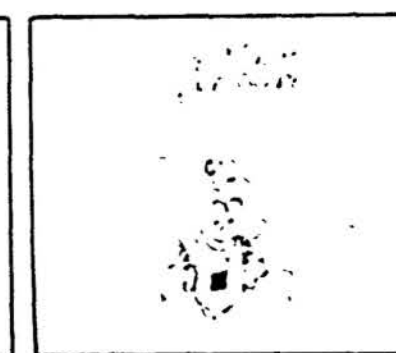

Some people really got excited, especially when it was a close race. Fans were urging the jockeys and horses to race faster.

Disappointment was contagious, especially at our table. It seems our group was having the same type of luck -- bad.

By the 10th race, our table's spirits were dragging, and our wallets were considerably lighter.

It was fun for the day, and I'd probably go again. But, until April 1 rolls around, horse racing is out of the question.

say-so in what happens, if they're interested at all. "They can show up and let them know they're not in favor of not being allowed in these establishments," she said. "I mean kids spend a lot of money in this town. They should be heard."

"My guess would be that the college is the biggest source of income (in Hays)," Shaver said. "Oil isn't doing anything, the farmers are starting to come back a little bit and with Traveler closed and everything, things are tough."

"A lot of merchants rely on the college students and so I think these kids need to fight a little bit for their rights," Shaver said. "Go in there and tell them 'Hey, we can come into these places and not drink and everything and if we do, then it's our responsibility. We should be able to put that responsibility on our shoulders, but you should at least be able to let us do it.'"

Attendance is just as important, Shaver said.

"Their opinion counts just as much as those who are there. After all, it is their rights. They shouldn't be afraid to speak up, or even listen to what's going on," she said. "That will make them knowledgeable of what's happening. But they definitely need to be there."

Another concern of the tavern owners, Shaver said, is the matter of minors using false identification.

"Right now, as it stands, if the student or the underage person presents us with a fake ID and we serve them beer and the police come in and they get caught, we're liable for that also," she said. "That shouldn't be right."

"Because how do I know if it's a fake ID or if it's real? Sometimes I get these out-of-state licenses in here. Well, how can I stand here and say that's not an official license unless I know for sure? They're saying we're liable for it, knowingly or unknowingly. We don't agree with that."

Shaver said her tavern has come up with a method to counteract the fake IDs.

"They come in to socialize or shoot pool or dance at other places and things like that. I don't think it's right that we should keep them out."

-Gayleen Shaver
Tavern manager

"If you come into an establishment and you're under 21, the doorman or the bartender, whichever, cards you. If you're 21, we keep the driver's license until you're ready to leave. We mark you with a red X or with some kind of sign and then whenever you're ready to leave you can have your driver's license back as long as you still have that logo or stamp."

"If it's washed off, you don't get your driver's license and we turn it over to the police department. Also if you get caught drinking when you're in there you don't get your driver's license back. We turn it over to the police department," Shaver said.

"I tried that Wednesday for a test and it turned out real well. The only problem is explaining it at the door," she said.

"Another thing we went to get changed or clarified or something is the possession law. We feel that if the underage person has come in and if the underage person is sitting at a table where there is beer, that should not be possession," Shaver said. "He should either have it in his hand or be drinking it. Then he should be written up."

The other taverns represented by the group are the Brass Rail, 114 E. 11th St.; the Golden Q, 809 Ash St.; the Downtowner, 104 E. Seventh St.; Mary K's, 1702 Vine St.; Beer Garden, E. Eighth St.; the Horseshoe, Eighth and Vine streets; Ruppy's Place, 1001 Main St.; and the Redcoat Restaurant, 507 W. Seventh St.

Shaver said that one reason she is supporting the move to get those under 21 into taverns is because there is no alternative for them.

"Where else have the kids got to go?" she said. "They come in to socialize or shoot pool or dance at other places and things like that. I don't think it's right that we should keep them out."

Shaver said her group is ready for the meeting Thursday.

"We want to be able to work with the city commission and the police department," she said. "We're not going in there as enemies. We want to go in there and try to figure out something that we can work together on."

Following through on his motion, Dana Forsythe, Hays sophomore, watches his ball go down the bowling alley Saturday morning in the Muscular Dystrophy Association's beach bowl.

Muscular Dystrophy big winner of contest

University organizations and individuals raised approximately $1,850 for Muscular Dystrophy at the "Beach Bowl" party this past weekend.

The "Beach Bowl" fund-raiser was described as a huge success by Walter Zemanick, MUAB president.

"I was very impressed with the turn out. We raised over $1,800, while our competition, Emporia State, raised $1,500," Zemanick said.

The top individual fund-raiser was Nancy Durler, Wright junior, who raised $96.

The top team fund-raisers and runners-up for the various categories were as follows: Campus Wide Organizations, MUAB, Leader-Spare Change, Departmental Organizations, Marketing Club, Physics Club, Open Class Organizations, McMinder 2-Wonderful and Thrills and Chills.

Each of these organizations will receive trophies for their fund-raising efforts. The other trophies awarded are as follows: top male bowler, Donald King, Jr., Hiawatha senior, who bowled a 463 series; top female bowler, Juno Ogle, Phillipsburg freshman, who bowled a 427 series; and high series by a team, Marketing Club, which bowled a 1,491.

Bowlers need to turn in their pledge packets and fund monies by Friday, March 11 to the MUAB office.

Prizes and trophies will be awarded at that time.

firetruck and turn on the siren," Mackenzie Britton, a five year old from Ellsworth, said.

"The firemen explained the hook-and-ladder truck and all of the other equipment in the station," Schoaff said.

Schoaff said that despite of the students' ages, the information usually sinks in.

"Most of what is said at these tours makes an impression on the children, especially the older ones," she said.

Britton explained what she would do in case of a fire.

"My mommy would close my door and I would feel it. If it was hot I wouldn't go back to bed," Britton said.

Michael Donnelly, a four year old from Hays, added that he would call the fire department.

"Sometimes it's the students who make their parents aware of fire hazards when they bring home the pamphlets and stickers for their bedroom windows," she said, referring to glow-in-the-dark stickers, which are placed on windows to indicate where a child may be sleeping.

Schoaff said that the students learn about more than fires on such field trips.

"The students learn about going places together and listening to others talk. They also have to get used to sticking to a schedule and rushing from place to place," she said.

"They will have to recall much of what they've learned during our discussions on fire safety that will follow," she said.

"Sometimes it's the students who make their parents aware of fire hazards when they bring home the pamphlets and stickers for their bedroom windows,"

Ben Hartley has been the new food service director at Fort Hays State since the beginning of the semester.

Munkel has supervisory position

Hartley takes place as food service director

A new food service director has come to Fort Hays State.

Mike Munkel, who had been food service director since 1984, has taken a supervisory position with Marriott, FHSU's food service company.

"Taking a half-step up is what the new position means to me," Munkel said.

Munkel's new position involves traveling to other colleges within the state of Kansas.

His district includes about 10 states, however, Munkel's work is concentrated mainly in Kansas.

The main responsibilities, according to Munkel, involve sales, personnel work and human resources.

"Although there are no plans to move right now, relocation might be a must in the future," Munkel said.

The new director, Ben Hartley, came from Kansas Newman College, where he served as food service director there.

Ben, his wife, Carrie, and their two daughters moved to Hays last month.

"For me, this is a whole step up," Hartley said.

When asked if he would be making any changes, Hartley said, "we never make any changes right away."

Alabama native was 'Star Search' champ

Comedian Henley to appear in Spotlight

By MADELINE HOLLER
Staff Writer

"Star Search" champion, Vic Henley, a native Alabamian, will utilize his southern heritage in his act when he performs tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Black and Gold room.

"He's a clean but funny comedian," Shawn Beuchat, Silver Lake Junior, said.

Beuchat saw Henley perform at the regional National Association for Collegiate Activities convention.

"He was one of the more popular comedians there," he said.

Born and raised in Alabama, Henley uses his southern drawl and other oddities to enhance his acts.

"He's great fun," I.B. Dent, director of student activities, said.

"He's very college oriented and has a lot of material that relates to college students," Dent said.

Henley has appeared three times on the "CBS Morning Program," "Showtime Coast to Coast" and was featured on "USA's Night Flight."

"He's appeared on a lot of TV shows and he won two out of three times on 'Star Search,'" Beuchat said.

"His show has appeal and he doesn't use a lot of props to interest the audience."

"He keeps the audience going with his material and his ability to hold their attention," Beuchat said.

Henley is now touring various schools in Kansas and Dent said that he is generating more interest as he goes.

"Vic was one of the most popular comedy shows to choose from," Dent said.

He is touring all of the Kansas schools right now and has been a big success," he said.

"I've only heard positive things about his performances," he said.

Anna Luhman, college studies for the gifted director, has had her program studied by other schools.

FHSU's college gifted program is nationally-known

Luhman's studies gain recognition

By JUNO OGLE
Staff Writer

The Fort Hays State college studies for the gifted program has received national recognition.

The CSG program was approved by the U.S. Department of education national diffusion network joint dissemination review panel last year.

The program, which provides advanced educational opportunities for gifted junior high and high school students, is now a developer/demonstrator program.

It will provide training, materials and technical assistance to institutions that adopt the program.

Anna Luhman, director of CSG, is excited about the program's development.

"I think it's very exciting. We're emerging as a national program here," she said.

Luhman developed the program in 1980 and has been director ever since.

Thirteen institutions across the country, including the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va., and California State University, Long Beach, Calif., have shown interest in adopting the program.

Four of the 13 -- Wichita State University, the University of Georgia, the University of Tennessee and the University of Washington -- have already adopted the program.

In adopting the program, the universities sign a contract stating that they will run the program in the same method as FHSU.

In return, FHSU will provide the training, materials and data processing for the adopted programs.

Luhman has been traveling around the country giving awareness presentations to interested universities and aiding in the adoption process.

She thinks that universities are attracted by the program's variety.

"What attracts them is the wide age range we work with, and that it's not just arts and sciences."

The CSG program works with intellectually, artistically, dramatically and musically gifted students age 10-18.

This semester, 16 students from the area are enrolled in the program.

The CSG students participate in the program by taking selected university courses while they are still enrolled in their regular schools.

"In this manner, the students benefit from the stimulation of their intellectual peers at the university and also have the benefit of social interaction with their age group at their own school," Luhman said.

The students receive credit for their junior high, high school or college transcripts.

Fort Hays State vs. Washburn in contest for second straight year

By MIKE MARZOLF
Sports Editor

There is no tomorrow for the Fort Hays State basketball team. It is win or turn in your stuff when it travels to Topeka tonight to play for the right to continue its season.

To do that, the Tigers must defeat a team that has given them problems in recent years, the Washburn University Ichabods.

The game is set for 7:30 p.m. in Lee Arena at Washburn University.

FHSU has not beaten Washburn since March 3, 1986, when the two met in the semi-finals of the district playoff in Hays, with the Tigers coming out on top, 79-67.

For the second straight year, and the fourth time in the last five seasons, FHSU and Washburn will play to see who represents the District 10 in Kansas City, Mo., next week during the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics championships.

Traditionally, the District 10 has fared extremely well, winning three of the past four NAIA national championships. FHSU won in 1983-84 and in 1984-85, and the Ichabods won last year.

To qualify for the NAIA championships, FHSU will have to turn the tide against a team that has defeated them the last five outings.

Only four of the Tigers have been involved in a win against the Ichabods, and of those players, only Mike Miller and Cedric Williams saw extensive action and scored.

This time around, however, Head Coach Bill Morse views the game as a different situation.

"I think we have been playing well," Morse said. "We have won 14 of our last 15 games, and I think we are in as good as shape as we can be."

The Tigers' only loss in the last 15 games was a ten-point setback, 72-62, in Topeka to the Ichabods on Feb. 6.

The Tigers have 10 consecutive wins and will enter the district championship game with a 26-4 record and ranked ninth in the nation.

"Twenty-six and four and ranked ninth in the nation is great," Morse said. "But the thing that is not great is to have someone in your district that is above ninth in the nation."

Washburn comes into the game with a 27-3 record and ranked fourth in the nation.

To advance to the title game, FHSU defeated another rival, Emporia State, 105-89, in the semi-final contest.

Mark Harris led the Tigers with 22 points, but was only one of five players who scored in double figures.

Ronnie Thompkins added 19, Shaun Manning, who missed the last Washburn game with an ankle injury, had 13, Antoine Williamson and Mike Miller added 12 and 10.

Now, the Tigers must focus on the Ichabods' Bobby Sumler.

Sumler was dismissed from the Ichabods for differences with Head Coach Bob Chipman, but after a team vote, he was reinstated.

During that time, the Ichabods lost to the Marymount Spartans in Salina, where FHSU has since won.

Morse doesn't think the absence of Sumler disrupted the Ichabods.

"I don't think it bothered them," Morse said. "I think more than anything, it helped to discipline Sumler and the team. They are probably as ready as they can be."

In the first meeting between the two schools, which Washburn won in Hays, 82-77, Sumler continually penetrated the FHSU defense en route to a 22-point performance.

The second time around Sumler again hurt the Tigers, dishing out several assists, many in the direction of 6-8 Rich Hamilton, who scored 18 points to lead the Ichabods.

"We have been practicing against that and we will attempt to stop him this time," Morse said.

Now, Morse is faced with having to come up with a plan of attack to defeat the Ichabods.

"We have put in a different man-to-man offense that will help us," Morse said. "I think we are a more experienced team now."

In other words, we have been through the wars and we got it going, and I think a combination of those two things will make a difference.

"So, I put it at that we have as good as chance to win as they have."

Rounding out the Ichabod starting five will be James Davenport, 6-7 center, Greg Wilson, 6-5 forward and Mike Dickerson, 6-2 guard.

Hamilton ended conference play in eighth place on the CSIC scoring list with a 14.2 average. He also finished fourth in rebounding at 9.4 a game and led the CSIC in field goal percentage with a .610 mark.

Sumler finished the season at 12.9, and was fifth in the conference in assists, averaging 3.6.

Dickerson wound up at 10.3 points and led the CSIC in three-point field goal accuracy, hitting .522 from long distance.

For the Tigers, Thompkins will open as the leading scorer with a 20.2 average, good for third in CSIC play.

Thompkins is second in the conference in rebounding with 9.9, and is directly behind Hamilton's field goal shooting at .599.

Harris finished seventh in the CSIC in scoring with a 17.4 average, and placed at the top of two conference categories.

Harris led the CSIC in free throw percentage, .875, and assists with 4.7 a game.

Harris also appears among the conference leaders in field goal percentage at .509, and three-point field percentage at .380.

Thomas Hardnett will start in the center spot for the Tigers, averaging 9.9 points a game and 6.5 rebounds.

Hardnett is third in the CSIC in field goal percentage, shooting .570.

Williamson will start at point guard, averaging seven points a game and 3.2 assists, which places him seventh in the CSIC.

The other forward position will be filled by either Miller, Williams or Brett Buller.

Manning, third in the CSIC in assists, will come off the bench at a guard spot.

This will mark the sixth time in six years at FHSU that Bill Morse has taken his team to the District 10 title game.

"We are really happy with that aspect, and we are happy with the 26-4 record," Morse said. "But, again, if we lose to Washburn it kind of puts a damper on our season."

Wrestlers return without champion

By HEATHER ANDERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

A fourth-place finish by 118-pounder Billy Johnson and seventh-place honors earned by 177-pound wrestler Mike Nansel, highlighted performances by Fort Hays State at the NAIA national tournament in Tacoma, Wash., this past weekend.

As a team, the Tigers ended the season with a 16th-place finish.

Johnson obtained his third straight year of All-American status by marking up a 4-2 record. He finished first last year and second his freshman season in the 118 division.

Nansel, the only senior on the team, received his first All-American honor at 177 with a tournament record of 3-2.

"I was happy with my finish," Nansel said. "I thought if I wrestled up to my maximum potential, I could have placed third, but another goal was to be an All-American."

"To place eighth to achieve All-American would be a great accomplishment, but I even won my final match and finished seventh," Nansel said.

He continued, explaining that finishing the season as an All-American meant more than just achieving a goal.

"Two years ago, I was on varsity and qualified for nationals, but didn't place in the top eight," Nansel said.

"Two summers ago, I broke my wrist and had to sit out last season. A lot of people told me I couldn't come back, but I have a lot of pride and wanted to prove to everyone and myself that not only could I wrestle, but wrestle well and be successful."

"I got a lot of support from the coach and the trainers. It was a great way to end my career, even though it's a sad thought to think my career's over," Nansel said.

Head Coach Wayne Petterson cited the efforts of Nansel and Johnson as outstanding, as well as the performance of Cliff Noce at 142 pounds.

Noce completed the tournament with a 2-2 record, and was one match from placing in the top eight.

"We're kind of disappointed to end up the sixteenth team in the nation," Petterson said.

"We got paired off with some pretty tough people and lost some close matches. The last few years, we've done well (finished in the top five), but we've gotten lucky on the draws."

"Many of our losses were to Central State, Okla., wrestlers, and I guess after meeting them six times during the year, there's not much else we could do."

"We felt we could have done a little bit better, but with all things considered, I didn't think we did too bad."

One of the wrestlers who was a victim of an unfortunate draw was West Harding, 134-pound freshman.

"I thought I got a bad deal on bracket placings," Harding said.

"I had to wrestle the second-seeded kid first round, and then I had Filipo from Central State second round. It also bothered me that I'd placed higher than the kid that got fourth earlier in the season in another tournament."

"I was kind of disappointed that I didn't place, because I figured I worked hard all year for nothing. However, I think if I would have gotten put anywhere else in the bracket, I probably would have had a pretty good chance of placing."

Greg Pfannenstiel, who earned All-American honors last year, failed to place this time around at 126 pounds.

Pfannenstiel finished the tournament with a 3-2 record, despite a serious shoulder injury obtained shortly before the tournament.

Tigers edge Georgia College

Gymnasts gain second in NAIA national competition

By TED HARBIN
Staff Writer

The Fort Hays State gymnastics team placed second at the NAIA national tournament last Saturday.

Going into the weekend, the Tigers were ranked third in the nation behind Centenary College, La., and Georgia College. Centenary came out on top of the tournament with a score of 141.2.

"It was pretty much expected going in that Centenary, unless they totally missed, was going to win," Head Coach Tawntia Augustine said.

"We really didn't know how we were going to compare to Georgia because they have been ahead of us all year long," Wendy Boudreaux, Aston, Penn., freshman said.

The Tigers scored a 137.4, and Georgia placed third with a 136.6.

"We got off to a real rocky start. Connie's (Terrell) grips broke in half on the bars," Augustine said.

Terrell had to finish her routine without the use of her grips.

"Rena (Lucke) had a real bad fall off the bars. We were afraid that she wouldn't get back up, but she finished the competition," Augustine said.

Caroline Leslie made the finals on the uneven bars, and finished tied in third place with a combined score of 17.65.

"They combine the scores from the preliminaries and the finals," Augustine said.

Leslie was chosen as an All-American on the beam, as well as in the all-around competition.

"She hit like she usually does," Boudreaux said.

In the all-around, Leslie finished in fifth place overall with a 34.8. Lucke finished at the No. 12 position with a 34.1.

Yvonne Hinojosa scored a 33.8, good enough for 14th, while Angie Ables placed 17th with a 33.1.

"When we are at meets, she (Yvonne) starts the yelling and the cheering and gets us pumped up," Boudreaux said.

On the balance beam, the Tigers scored the second highest score of the competition.

"We really hit the last four on the beam," Augustine said.

Jacquie Douglas was named to the All-American squad on the balance beam. She had a combined score of 17.1, which was good for fifth place.

Leslie placed ninth with a 16.35, followed by Lucke and Ables who scored 16.1 and 15.55.

Three Tigers placed in the top 10 on the floor exercise, with Douglas placing the highest. She scored a 17.85, which was good enough for sixth place.

Leslie placed eighth with a 17.75, and Lucke placed 10th with a 17.6.

"I was very pleased with the floor. It was our best event of the day."

"I felt comfortable about finishing it at least third place going into the vault," Augustine said.

Augustine said that the vaulting went poorly, and none of the Tigers qualified for the final round.

Following the Tigers vaulting routines, Augustine said that she heard the Tigers had claimed second place.

"It was a real great feeling when we found out."

"We were mentally tough. That's what it took to come back from a bad start," Augustine said.

FHSU forms trap shoot team

By TED HARBIN
Staff Writer

Fort Hays State now has a competing collegiate trap-shooting team.

Last semester, Jack Jackson, instructor of Journalism, and John Harrison, Bethesda, Md., freshman, made plans for a competitive trap team.

"Coach Jackson has been trying to get this started for years now," Harrison said.

Both men sent word around for people who were interested, and the calls came back.

"I teach a course in trap and skeet, and some of these guys were in my class," Jackson said.

The team now consists of 19 members, with Jackson coaching the group.

"We're not just a team, we're also an organization," Harrison said.

"Not everybody out there is going to be competing. The organization is for people who are interested. They don't even have to be any good," he said. Being an organization, the group elected officers, with Harrison as president.

Mike Schwein, Macksville junior, was elected as vice president, while Mike Ogles, Cimarron sophomore, was elected as treasurer.

"Eric Smith is the secretary, and Todd Gabel is the social chairman," Harrison said.

"Our first meet is at Kansas State on April 2. We will be competing against five other teams from Missouri and Kansas," Harrison said.

He said that FHSU is planning on sponsoring its own meet.

"Right now, we're learning how to put one on," Harrison said.

"We would like to host one in the future, but whether or not it will be this spring has yet to be decided," Jackson said.

Jackson has shot competitively before, but will serve as faculty advisor for the organization. Harrison tried out for the 1988 Olympic rifle team, for rifle,

"I was pretty satisfied with my performance, considering I didn't practice two or three weeks before the tournament."

"When I first got there, I wasn't sure if I was in good enough shape to compete, but after I wrestled a few matches I found out I was," Pfannenstiel said.

Greg Dixon competed at 150 pounds, but also failed to place, finishing the tournament at 0-2.

The Tigers end the season with a 3-8 dual record.

Although Petterson isn't satisfied with the national tournament finish or dual record, he looks to next year for a better outcome.

"Our dual record didn't turn out too well, and we only qualified six for the national tournament, but I think there are a lot of things that just didn't happen for us this year," Petterson said.

"We had several key injuries during the year, and there were some people we were counting on that didn't ever get in the line-up."

"However, we are only losing one senior, so I think we have a pretty good team coming back for next year."

The Fort Hays State baseball team opened its season this past weekend, winning one of four contests.

The Tigers were scheduled to open play Friday in Wichita, against Friends University, but was postponed due to weather.

That made the opening contest Saturday in Maryville, Mo., against Northwest Missouri State.

The Tigers dropped both contests, losing the first 8-4 and the second 4-0.

On Saturday, FHSU returned to Hays and opened its home schedule in Larks Park, splitting a pair of games with Baker University.

The Tigers captured the first contest, 8-1 and lost the nightcap of the twinbill, 6-4.
