CAMPUS

• Wordprocessing applications is the topic to be discussed at a two-part workshop in McCartney 217.

The workshop begins this Saturday and concludes May 7.

The workshop is from 9 a.m. to noon both days, and is sponsored by the Hays Area Chamber of Commerce and the Small Business Development Center.

The workshop leader is Jim Rucker, associate professor of business administration. For more information, contact the center at 628-5340.

• "Single Parent Families" is the title of a free workshop Thursday at the Kelly Psychological Clinic. The program begins at 7:30 p.m. in West Annex 202, and is conducted by Terry Becker and Mike Foley, graduate students in psychology. For more information, call the clinic at 628-4401.

• Alpha Kappa Psi, the professional business honorary, has elected officers for the 1988-89 school year. They are Mark Osborne, McDonald senior, president; Roger Kerschen, Garden Plain senior, vice president of pledging; Lorna Riboldy, Salina senior, vice president of efficiency; Sherry Sarver, Natoma senior, secretary; Bryan White, Tipton senior, secretary; and Kim Rupp, Hays junior, master of rituals.

• The school of nursing is in the process of forming an honorary, the Nursing Honor Society of Fort Hays State. Students and alumni will be eligible for membership if they maintain a 3.0 grade point average and rank in the upper 35 percent of their graduating class.

Nursing faculty are automatically eligible, and nurses in the community who have an outstanding record may also join the organization. A 13-member steering committee has been appointed to plan the induction and installation ceremonies in early October. For more information, call Agnes Janoscrat at 628-4255.

• Fort Hays State and St. Catherine Hospital in Garden City will cooperate to train southwest Kansas radiologic technology students beginning in June.

Loren Garlets, head of the radiologic technology program at FHSU, said St. Catherine will serve as a major clinical site for FHSU's radiologic technology program.

Students receive their clinical training at the hospital, and then transfer to FHSU to work on bachelor's and master's degrees.

• Friday is the day that master's theses and specialists field studies and the oral exam are due in the graduate school office.

Committees start search for new vice presidents

By DAVID BURKE
Managing Editor

Although the exact number of applicants hasn't been counted, the search committees for two vice presidential openings will begin reviewing applications for those jobs in meetings today.

Fort Hays State President Edward Hammond, chair of the vice president for student affairs and vice president for institutional advancement committees, said that the number of applicants for each position was "more than enough."

"There's been a number of them gone through already, and we're really pleased with the number," Hammond said.

Hammond said the number was about what he had expected.

"A really good and positive aspect of this is the number of vice presidents from other schools who have applied," Hammond said.

Hammond said that there were two candidates currently at FHSU who had applied for the student affairs position, but no internal applications for the institutional advancement position.

The committee meetings today will screen the applicants down to a smaller pool, Hammond said.

"Then we'll start to do some background work and checking on that in the next week or so," Hammond said. "And then sometime in May we'll bring these people in front of the committee."

Hammond said that he would prefer to have the committee interview three to five finalists for each position.

The interviews may take place by taking the committee to the candidate. In last year's presidential search resulting in the appointment of Hammond, finalists were brought to the FHSU campus for interviews. Hammond said he would prefer to have the committee travel to the candidate.

"I would like to do that as a way to find out about them by talking to people in their surroundings," Hammond said. "We can find out more that way."

Hammond said that once appointed, the new vice presidents would take office sometime between July 1 and the beginning of the fall semester.

"That way, if they can't get loose from their job right away, they can have time to get here," Hammond said.

Bob Lowen, director of university relations, said that the Chronicle of Higher Education was the only publication where the positions were advertised.

"It's kind of like the Bible of higher education," Lowen said. "It's the only place we went with our advertisement."

Lowen, a member of the vice president for institutional advancement search committee, said that although April 20 was set as the target date for the applications, any more that were coming in would still be reviewed by both committees.

"Even though they've come in after the application deadline, we'll consider those, too," Lowen said.

The search committees of 11 members each are looking for replacements for Bill Jellison, vice president for student affairs, and Ron Pflughoff, vice president for university development and relations.

The title of Pflughoff's position was changed in Hammond's reorganization process.

Jellison resigned his position to become a special assistant to Hammond; Pflughoff resigned to pursue outside business interests.

Hays Days returns

The sights, sounds and smells of the old west will come back to life this weekend, as Hays Days return this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Friday's events include a quilt show at the Ellis County Historical Society, the Mid-America Arts and Crafts Show at the Mall, the Fort Hays State Rodeo at the rodeo grounds and a barbecue at the Fort Hays Experiment Station.

Sunell Koerner, Hays Days chairperson, said that FHSU faculty, staff and students are encouraged to attend the barbecue.

Tickets for the barbecue are available from Sigma Sigma Sigma or Alpha Kappa Psi members.

Saturday's activities include the continuing of the rodeo and quilt show, a "Living History" at Historic Fort Hays

Activities downtown will include buggy rides, food booths, a casino and checkers tournament.

The Alive Theater will present "Frontiers" Friday night and "Baby Doe Tabor" Saturday night.

Sunday's events include a handicapped square dance exhibit at Frontier City and a gunfight exhibition.

Two separate "Royal Weekends in Hays" will be given away.

"Last year, we gave away weekends in Santa Fe, New Mexico," Koerner said. "This year, we thought, why not give away something locally, so people can take advantage of what's going on here?"

The weekend includes lodging and meals, $300 in citywide shopping money and a $100 downtown shopping certificate.

Graduates interview for jobs

Teacher fair attracts 800

By DANNA KAISER
Staff Writer

Approximately 800 teachers and May graduates showed up to interview at the Fort Hays State University Teacher Career Fair Monday at Gross Memorial Coliseum.

The fair was FHSU's 12th annual, and, according to Dan Rice, director of career development and placement, was probably the largest.

"Recruiters are up over last year," Rice said of the approximate 12 states and 225 school districts represented at the fair.

Representatives from the schools interviewed college graduates seeking their first teaching job, teachers wishing to change school districts and teachers wanting to relocate to another state.

"It's mainly a fishing trip," said Dan Brungardt, a December 1987 graduate of FHSU in elementary education.

"You hear a lot of 'maybes' and 'could bes,'" he said.

Brungardt, who is seeking a job in the area, brought resumes and the usual interviewing materials, but he also brought his wife, Bev, to hold a place in line at one school while he interviewed at another.

Brungardt said he had interviewed with Hays, Victoria, Ellis, Ingalls and Independence schools.

His wife was standing in line for him at Hutchinson.

Denise Haberer, a candidate for May graduation from Bethany College was also waiting in the Hutchinson line.

"There are probably 500 people wanting the same job I do," she said.

Rice had earlier described the fair as a screening process for scheduling second interviews.

Dwight Hemmerling, Plainville elementary school principal, said he had interviewed approximately 20 people, primarily Hays residents wanting to stay in the area.

"This is a real good one," Hemmerling said of the fair.

"I imagine we'll probably hire some of our positions out of this -- it gives us a good chance to see them without bringing them out for first interviews."

Haberer had interviewed with Wichita, Jewel, Oberlin and Quinter.

She said she had set up secondary interviews with Jewel and Oberlin, and that her interview with Wichita was her third because she had talked to them at Bethany and also at a similar interviewing fair April 7 at the University of Kansas, Lawrence.

Disability topic of speech

By MARVEL BALL
Staff Writer

Featured speaker Richard Harris, coordinator of handicapped student services at Ball State University, Muncie, Ind., will speak at an access workshop on Friday in the Black and Gold room of the Memorial Union for the final stage of disability awareness week.

"He is an excellent speaker and puts a little humor into his talks about the disabled," Cheryl H. Towns, director of disabled students, said.

The workshop is open to anyone who is interested, especially postsecondary counselors; learning center directors; teachers; administrators; disabled student services providers; admissions personnel; secondary counselors; special education teachers; paraprofessionals; and community service providers, such as vocational rehabilitation counselors and transition specialists.

"I'm looking forward to a large attendance. It should be a fantastic workshop for everyone," Towns said.

The workshop is being sponsored by Fort Hays State and the Access Grant, a grant funded by the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitation Services.

It is designed to help postsecondary education for students who are learning disabled, hearing impaired, visually impaired or physically disabled. Registration begins with coffee, tea and blueberry muffins at 9 a.m. There is no registration fee.

Harris will be speaking at 9:30 and 10:30 a.m., and also at 2:45 p.m.

Lunch will be served at 12:30 p.m. in the Fort Hays Ballroom. The cost is $4.75 per person.

A panel discussion: Disabled Students Speak Out, will begin at 1:30 p.m. Several students will answer questions from the audience about being disabled.

At 3:30 p.m., the disabled students association will be making a giant ice cream sundae for everyone to enjoy.

"I'm looking forward to a good week, and I think the workshop on Friday will be very beneficial," Towns said.

Smokers deserve same rights, privileges as non-smokers

Every American citizen supposedly has the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. But that changed somewhat Saturday when smoking was banned on all flights of less than two hours. A group of non-smokers banded together out of selfishness so they could fly the airways in a peaceful setting.

For many smokers, however, this may force them to find alternative ways of travel. After all, smoking is an addictive habit, and many people can't last two hours without a cigarette in their mouth.

That, supposedly, is why smoking and non-smoking sections were made in the first place. In this way, it would be fair for all concerned. The smokers could be in their section and the non-smokers could be in a private section away from the smoke-filled room.

Eventually, the non-smokers want to expand the ban on all flights, regardless of the length of the flight. Who knows where this might end? They could eventually ban together and force their will on the rest of the country.

Violators can be fined up to $1,000 for this dastardly act. The ban affects nearly 80 percent of all domestic flights and over 13,000 flights will be affected each day.

Although many airlines offered substitutes such as candy and gum to the smokers, that just wouldn't be the same.

Although many people believe this would be a petty issue, just place yourself in the shoes of a smoker. Would you like to be told what you can and cannot do? Just think about it.

Committee travel costs could prove expensive

If you can't bring the candidate to the committee, then bring the committee to the candidate.

That seems to be the philosophy of Fort Hays State President Edward Hammond, who would prefer to have the search committees, which will select the two FHSU vacant vice president positions, travel to the candidates.

"I would like to do that as a way to find out about them by talking to people in their surroundings," Hammond said. "We can find out more that way."

That sounds fine, but who is going to pay for this trip? The university?

Hammond said that he would prefer to have the committee interview three to five finalists for each position.

That's a possibility of six to 10 trips. Depending on the location of these candidates, that could amount to a sizable amount of money.

First, the university needs to decide where the funds will come from to pay for this trip.

Second, if the university is funding this venture, it needs to decide if this is a practical expense when so many organizations on campus feel they are being pinched by budget cuts.

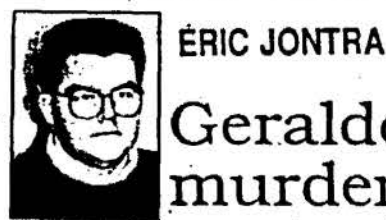

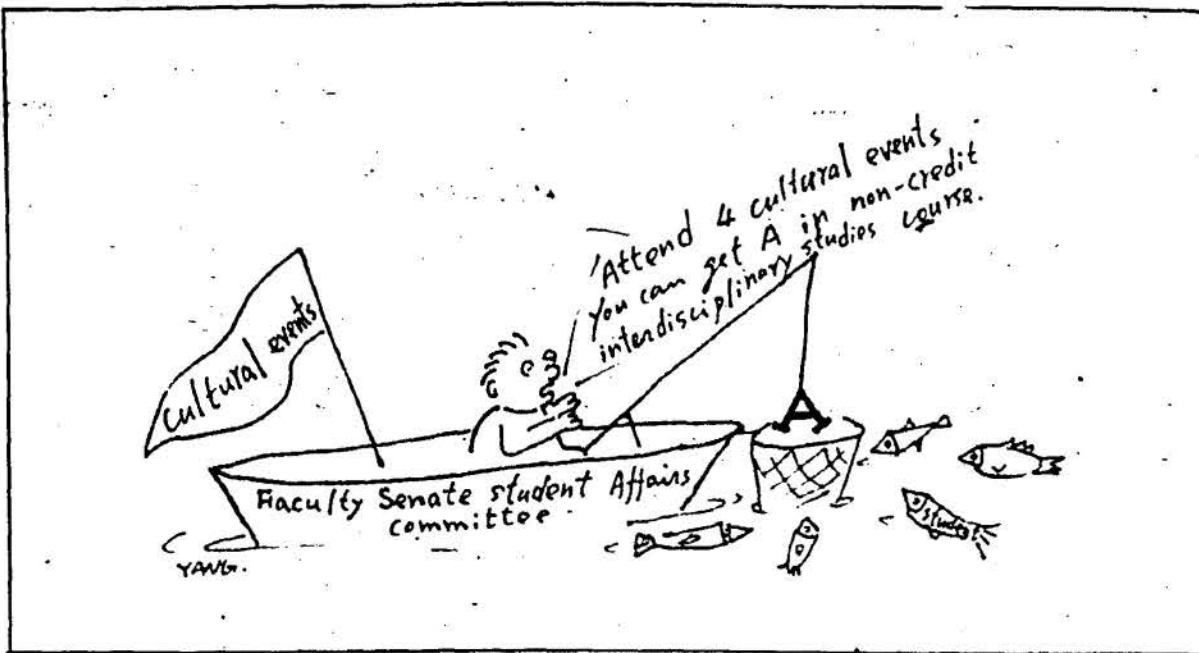

The university would benefit from being able to interview the candidates in their environment.

And, obviously, these are two crucial positions in the organization of the university.

But, we have to remember that each committee has 11 members. That's a lot of people to provide transportation for.

Are all the candidates within driving distance? Will the committee members travel by mini-bus, car or will they have to travel by plane?

The university needs to make sure this is a feasible business trip and not just an all-expense paid vacation for the committees chaired by President Hammond -- DW

Geraldo specials sensationalize murderers like Charles Manson

During the past few years, we've all seen talk-show hosts like Phil Donahue and Oprah Winfrey lean over the line that separates good journalism from sensationalism.

But just when you think they've gone too far, they snap back to the realm of quality, informative journalism that has become the mark of each.

Because of this, Phil and Oprah get high ratings and have a faithful viewing audience.

Too bad Geraldo Rivera can't watch and learn. His new program, which is also broadcast daily, doesn't even come remotely close to being a good talk-show.

Geraldo, like his two fellow talk-show hosts, likes to shock the viewer -- whether it needs to be done or not. The problem with Geraldo is that he doesn't seem to know when to back off.

I used to like his style; he never accepted an answer he thought was incorrect, and he always stayed with a story until the bitter end.

My problem with his style today is that, quite often, he stays with a story too long -- a perfect example of which occurred during his most recent special program.

"Murder: Live from Death Row," was broadcast on WDAF-

Channel 4 last Sunday night. The two-hour program began at 10:30 p.m., and took a very long look at different murders that have taken place during the past 20 years and the surrounding situations.

Geraldo's most notable guest on the program was friendly Charles Manson, the convicted murderer most famous for the death of actress Sharon Tate.

For the entire two hours, Geraldo kept flashing to interview segments with Manson, which were taped in the prison where he will most likely reside for the next few hundred years.

In between these segments were discussions with law-enforcement officials, psychologists, family members in other murder cases and additional convicted murderers.

For awhile, the cases were fairly interesting. I wasn't familiar with many of them, and hearing about them was really interesting.

But in the second hour of the program, I became lost in a literal flood of sensationalistic journalism. Graphic photographs and descriptions of murders seemed to be a part of the show for only one reason -- to shock the viewers.

Of course, quotes such as "You're a mass-murderin' dog, Charlie," from the professional reporter Geraldo to the prisoner Manson didn't help much. Call me old-fashioned, but I think statements like that are extremely unprofessional for a journalist of any kind.

Really, the entire context of the program wasn't any more complicated than that. Unless, of course, you consider that Geraldo was in charge.

Personally, I take offense to this style of journalism. As a journalist, I always attempt to maintain a "neutral" stance on most issues. Journalists are supposed to serve as a sort of mediator between the general public and the news.

Geraldo fails miserably in his attempt to do so.

Phil and Oprah may take sides on issues, but they always maintain a sense of journalistic dignity while doing so.

Unfortunately, Geraldo doesn't, and it is that factor alone which, I believe, will always leave him stamped as the "other guy with a talk-show that used to be on 20/20."

Maybe, if we're lucky, his sensationalism will catch up to him quick enough to keep the show from staying on the airwaves too long.

Woeful O's enduring spells, jinxes during record streak

What a difference five years make.

This couldn't be more true for the Baltimore Orioles, losers of their first 17, no, 18 games of the season.

The O's already have the record for most consecutive losses at the start of the season and are on course to break the record of 23 straight losses posted by the 1961 Philadelphia Phillies.

The O's, who won the 1983 World Series and lost to the Pittsburgh Pirates in the 1979 World Series, have slowly fallen from baseball's penthouse to the outhouse.

They had been one of the most consistent franchises for many years. Opposing managers always knew they had their hands full when they faced former Manager Earl Weaver, along with the club's great pitching, good defense and timely power hitting.

But the days of Jim Palmer, Scott McGregor, Ken Singleton, a young Eddie Murray and a consistent bullpen are no more.

Maybe they should hire someone to cast away the spell they seemingly have on them.

But if there is a spell on them, who did it?

Was it the congressmen from the Iran-contra hearings. They must have been upset that lawyer Edward Bennett Williams, the owner of the O's, kept whispering to Oliver North, thus getting him off the hook.

Or it could have been Chief Noc-a-homa, the mascot of the Atlanta Braves. Chief Noc possibly didn't want his Braves to be the worst team in baseball, so he did a rain dance. The rains didn't come, but the losses have for the O's.

David Copperfield might be the culprit. He may have goofed up one of his magic hat tricks while performing in Baltimore's Municipal Stadium, thus causing the baseball to disappear just as it crosses home plate when the Orioles are at bat.

New York Yankee owner George Steinbrenner might be paying every Oriole to lose every game this year. George may have thought the O's would contend with his Yankees, and George knows so much about baseball.

The Orioles fired manager Cal Ripken Sr. only six games into the season. They then hired Frank Robinson for the gut-wrenching job.

After watching his team lose 12 games, Robinson is looking for a silver-lining anywhere.

"They played well, I saw some plusses," he said after their 17th loss.

But should they be among the ranks of the defeated? When the pitching is horrendous, the team is batting .113, they've been outscored 114-34 and all-star shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. is batting only .125, I have to think so.

The joke on ESPN's Sportscenter serves only as another reminder of the Orioles woes.

What do Michael Jackson and the Baltimore Orioles have in common? They both wear gloves, but for no apparent reason.

When left fielder Jeff Stone let a fly ball fall in front of him, scoot on by him and roll to the outfield fence, allowing the Kansas City Royals to win in the ninth inning a week ago. It makes the joke sound so true.

Managers and players of other teams have also said they feel sorry for the 1988 edition of the Orioles.

"I kind of feel bad for them," Royals manager John Wathan said. "It's unfortunate. They have too good a ballclub to go through something like this."

On paper they do, but on the field they have done little right.

Democrats need Jesse for victory in November

I'm not exactly what you would call a big Jesse Jackson supporter.

But, after listening to a debate between Jackson and Democratic front-runner Michael Dukakis, I'm becoming more and more convinced that Jackson has what it takes.

Granted, Jackson probably doesn't stand much of a chance to become the nominee because he is black and lacks experience. But, there is one thing that Jackson does exceptionally well.

He can stir a crowd and deliver enthusiastic speeches. Not since Ronald Reagan has a candidate been able to communicate with voters as eloquently as Jackson does.

Jackson cares about the issues, but everywhere he goes, all people seem to want to look at is his color. I don't know about you, but the color of a man's skin would be the least of my worries during an election.

People see that he's black and automatically decide to vote for Dukakis. But, if people would just listen to Jackson, they would come to the belief that he has solutions for many problems.

The people of Pennsylvania have a big decision to make today. A vote for Dukakis would pretty much wrap up his nomination. But, a vote for Jackson, and the race could become a whole new ballgame.

As of this printing, Dukakis has a comfortable margin in the polls. But all of that could change within hours.

Jackson is assured of drawing the black vote. In fact, in the latest poll, he would capture nearly 90 percent of the black vote in Pennsylvania. But Dukakis is doing as well in the Jewish vote, and that could swing the primary in his favor.

No matter how the results turn out, however, one thing is becoming clearer in the minds of Democratic leaders.

Jackson is working himself into a role whereby he almost has to have a place on the ticket. If he is denied a chance to run as the party's vice-presidential nominee, they may as well hand the presidency on a silver platter to George Bush.

The blacks would revolt and storm from the democratic party. But there are also others who believe that if Jackson were to appear on the ticket, it would backfire and hand the win to Bush in November, because the whites who voted for Dukakis would not vote for that ticket.

If Dukakis-Jackson were to be the ticket for the Democrats, they would be a formidable challenge for Bush. Jackson would be exactly what Dukakis needs to win the South in November.

The Democrats need someone that can deliver the South. Jackson would be just the man Dukakis would need on his ticket.

Both Dukakis and Jackson have treated each other with kid gloves during their debates. Neither one believes in a dirty tactics campaign and that lends even more credence to the fact they need one another.

Neither one wants to make the other candidate upset, because it would harm their chances to be on the ticket.

Dukakis could deliver the Northeast, especially the Massachusetts area, while Jackson would deliver the black vote.

Together, they are going to prove to be tough to beat in November.

Group shows off international customs

Students represent 22 countries in fair

By MADELINE HOLLER
Staff Writer

The world shrank to the size of a ballroom, yesterday. Students representing 22 countries displayed costumes, artifacts and posters at the International Student Fair in the Memorial Union Black and Gold Room.

In addition to the various displays, five students performed dances and songs traditional to their homelands. Darla Rous, international student adviser, said that the students were pleased with the reaction of the people of Hays.

"The students were real happy with the number of people who showed up," she said.

Rous said that it was good for the students to have an opportunity to show the community something about themselves.

"After being integrated into our culture, they need the opportunity to have others see something about their homelands," she said.

Rous said that people learn by seeing the differences between the cultures.

"I feel that seeing different kinds of scripts, attire and some of the literature, specifically about religion, makes people more aware of the true differences in our cultures," Rous said.

"These fairs tell others about our own cultures, they explain things we assume about people," Lui Siu-wa, Hong Kong graduate, said.

"To know one person, it is better to know his background," he said.

Troy Smith, Larned freshman, said that this fair was a good opportunity to place names on frequently seen faces.

"I see a lot of these people run around, and I wonder where they are from," Smith said.

"Things like this fair bring people together," he said.

"A lot of Americans see these international students on campus, but just blow them off. They should get to know them better," he said.

Arthur Khaw, international student president and Australia graduate student, said that such fairs help students and people in general overcome many barriers that preconceived ideas may set up.

"Many people place barriers on themselves and other cultures. If we can break some of these barriers we can make this world a better place," he said.

Haselhorst takes 5th at KU

By TIM PARKS,
Staff Writer

Jon Haselhorst placed fifth in the 110-meter high hurdles while competing in the 63rd annual University of Kansas Relays last weekend.

Haselhorst, a sophomore, turned in time of 14.3 while competing against 32 other hurdlers.

Many universities, colleges and junior colleges competed in the event.

The men's four-mile relay placed fifth in their event. Jon Lopez, Rick Walker, Tim Welker and Tom Welker made up the team.

"We went up against very tough competition," Fort Hays State Head Coach Jim Krob said. "Our KU crew did very well, especially Jon with his fifth-place effort."

While many of Krob's men were competing in Lawrence, the rest of the Tiger team took part in the Tabor College Invitational.

The FHSU women, who finished first, were led by Karen Borgstedt, who scored 32 points.

Borgstedt, a sophomore, won the triple jump, finished second in the high jump, third in the 110-meter high hurdles and fourth in the long jump.

The Tiger team outdistanced second-place Hutchinson Community College by a score of 133-91.

Rosa Esparza also helped the Tiger cause by finishing first in the 3,000-meter run and the 1,500-meter run.

The women's 400-meter relay team placed first and set a season record.

The relay finished with a time of 50.5.

Rita Grädig, Marlys Gwaltney, Linda Ragland and Kelly Jackson made up the team.

Marlon Thornburg captured the only men's first-place finish in the 10,000-meter run.

Thornburg finished the race with a time of 33:50.

"Marlon was outstanding," Krob said.

The men's split-squad finished sixth in the meet with 48 points.

Butler County Community College won the men's division with 124 points.

"The people at Tabor competed well for the most part.

Our ladies did well even with a number of our key runners with the flu," Krob said.

Tomorrow the Tigers will be competing in the Kearney State College Invitational. Teams from Doane College, Hastings College, FHSU, Kearney State and some members of the University of Nebraska track team will be competing.

This weekend approximately 10 members of the men's team will take part in the Drake University Relays.
