Alcohol advertising analyzed

Only two minutes of advertising during the first game of the World Series was devoted to alcohol.

In a contest that was part of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, which continues through tomorrow, guesses were made about how much time would be devoted to alcohol-related advertising during the first game of the World Series.

Black Student Union, one of the contest sponsors, videotaped the game and made the following determinations:

- from the first pitch to the last out, the game lasted 160 minutes;
- advertising appeared after each half-inning and during the three pitching changes;
- each advertising segment lasted two minutes;
- usually, four advertisements appeared during each segment;
- of the 20 or more corporations advertising during the game, only Anheuser-Busch purchased alcohol-related advertising;
- of the 40 minutes of advertising broadcast, only 2 minutes were alcohol related.

Predictions of alcohol-related advertising ranged from 0 minutes to 19 and 45 seconds. The average prediction was 7 minutes, 49 seconds, according to Jim Nugent, director of substance abuse and wellness programming.

Sale supports scholarships

A chance to buy quality art at reasonable prices is open to Hays area residents at the annual scholarship sale tomorrow.

From 10 a.m. to noon, in front of Rarick Hall, students and faculty will exhibit work in a wide range of media.

Proceeds from the sales will help fund art department scholarships.

'Wives' rehearsals begun

The cast for the second fall Fort Hays State theater production began this week.

"The School for Wives" will open at Felten-Start Theatre at 8 p.m. Nov. 15-17 and at 2 p.m. on Sunday Nov. 18. The Sunday matinee will include a visual interpretation for the hearing impaired.

The comedy by Moliere is based upon the author's real-life marriage to an actress, director Lloyd Frerer, professor of communication, said.

In the show, a man wishes to ensure his wife's fidelity by training her with simple-minded obedience.

This early version of women's liberation was soundly attacked by the moralists, and only the interference of Louis XIV saved the play from the censors, Frerer said.

Development checks offered

Parents wanting to check their children's development can make appointments until Oct. 27 for free screenings.

The Early Childhood Developmental Center, 94 Lewis Drive, will conduct free screening on Nov. 8 and 9.

Local professionals will be checking speech, language, vision, hearing, thinking and motor development for children aged 1 month to 4 years.

Children who live in Ellis or Rush counties are eligible to attend the screening.

Faculty recital Thursday

Jane D. Brown, instructor of music, will present an organ recital Thursday, Oct. 25 in Malloy 115.

FHSU concerned with reports, rumors

By Juno Ogle
Editor in chief and Andy Addis
Managing editor

Reports and rumors of sexual attacks on or near campus have officials concerned about a panic.

Rumors have indicated numerous attacks on or around campus, but those rumors are unfounded, university officials say.

No sexual attacks have been reported on campus, and only two have been reported to city police, but one university faculty member said she is aware of more.

Those two attacks have occurred within the last few weeks and both happened off campus.

Capt. Don Deines of the Hays Police Department said the two cases are still under investigation.

"We hope there won't be any more, but we still haven't caught the people," Deines said.

The first case, which allegedly took place in the 500 block of West Seventh Street, is being treated as a reported rape, he said.

"That's without any facts to substantiate, if you get what I'm saying," Deines said.

The second report was not a rape, but sexual assault. In other words, no penetration was made. The assault occurred in the northwest part of town.

Chief Sid Carlile of the University Police said there have been no attacks on campus to the knowledge of University Police.

"We've had a tremendous amount of calls on rumors floating around campus. To my knowledge that's exactly what they are. We've had no reports substantiating what we've heard," Carlile said.

James Dawson, vice president for student affairs, also said no reports of on-campus attacks had been made to the Student Affairs Office.

One of the cases reported to city police did involve a Fort Hays State student, Dawson said.

Despite the fact university officials have received no reports of attacks, Anna Luhman, director of college studies for the gifted, said she knows of several attacks that have occurred in the last month.

The number of attacks Luhman said she is aware of is more than the number reported to city police. One may have happened on campus.

"If we have an incident on campus, I would make our people aware of the incident and location of the incident so we could be alert," Carlile said.

Any attack on campus should be reported to the University Police, or to city police if it occurs off campus, Carlile said.

"We can't do much if something's not reported. The fact is, if there's an incident and it's not reported to us, it's liable to happen to somebody else."

"I can't act on rumor," he said.

Dawson said it is the immediate concern of Student Affairs that the facts of these cases get to the public.

"What's most important now is we deal with the facts on hand and not allow rumors to create a panic situation," he said.

Student Affairs is developing workshop presentations on rape and date rape for the residence halls and sororities and fraternities, Dawson said.

Wiest Hall Council has already been planning for extended safety measures.

The council has developed a security escort service for female residents of McMinderes and Agnew halls while parking lot construction is going on.

Residents should drive by the main entrance of McMinderes, notify an escort, who will be wearing a black and gold sleeve badge, of where they will be parking and the escorts will be there.

"There was just some concern about security for the girls, because it's not very well lit. So, the council got together and decided to provide this service," Rob Glenn, Conway Springs senior and escort, said.

SGA hears address concerning security on campus

By Bryna McDaniel
Staff writer
and Juno Ogle
Editor in chief

In response to circulating rumors about possible rapes on campus Dorothy Knoll, assistant vice president for student affairs, addressed the Student Government Association to get their concerns and suggestions for possible improvements in campus security.

"My information on campus is that there have been no reported rapes; our campus security has not had any, not even any alleged cases. Student Affairs has not and none of the residence halls have had any cases," she said.

The positive side to the rumors, Knoll said, is that it will hopefully make students want to be aware and take more precautions against being vulnerable to such attacks.

When Knoll asked SGA for suggestions as to how to improve safety on campus the lack of lighting and exposure around the library was addressed. Also the possibility of a continuing escort service was brought up.

She also mentioned several clinics that will stress safety on campus will be held this fall.

Some simple precautions that women should take were addressed by campus and community officials.

"If a woman needs to go out to her car, she should go with a group of people or even better, have a guy escort her," Anna Luhman, director of college studies for the gifted, said.

"Always look in the back before getting in the car and have the proper key ready as you approach the car," she said.

Keys and other items can be used as weapons to fend off an attacker. A key held between the first two fingers can be an effective weapon.

"If someone does try to attack you, do whatever you can to get away, as long as you keep in mind your own safety as far as your life is concerned," Luhman said.

"Walk in pairs, have lights and carry whistles," Capt. Don Deines of the Hays Police Department, said.

On campus, the University Police can be of assistance, Chief Sid Carlile, said.

"If there is an attack, the number one thing to do is contact the police," James Dawson, vice president of student affairs, said.

If a victim does not wish to contact the police for any reason she can contact the Office of Student Affairs, the Student Health Center or the Kelly Psychological Service Center for completely confidential help.

Harry Leiker, Hays, tears away the asphalt of the parking lot on the west side of Wiest Hall yesterday afternoon. Hays Asphalt is doing the refurbishing of the parking lot, which will be done in two phases. Dennis Heier

Downtown Hays celebrates new image

By Juno Ogle
Editor in chief

Downtown Hays celebrates its new image tomorrow.

It is an image, created by the newly paved and lighted Main Street, that downtown supporters hope will dispel the myths of a slow death for the area.

On the contrary, the downtown area's 240 businesses are going strong and will continue to do so; Wayne Billinger, administrator of the Greater Downtown Business Improvement District, said.

The Main Event begins tomorrow at 5 p.m. with food and activities booths sponsored by downtown merchants.

A schedule of the night's events is as follows:

- Motorcade, 5:30 p.m. beginning at 6th and Main streets;
- Dedication, 5:45 p.m., Union Pacific Park, 10th and Main streets;
- Barricading of Main Street, 6 p.m.; entertainment begins in Union Pacific Park;
- Street dances begin. The Hermanettes, performing polka and country, 6 to 9 p.m. at Twelfth and Main streets; Dusty Rose, performing a variety of music, 7 to 10 p.m. at Seventh and Main streets.

There are several keys that will keep downtown alive, Billinger said. Those include Hays' population centers, anchors and unity.

"People talk about it (downtown) dying, but I don't think it can," Billinger said.

To the southwest is Fort Hays State, surrounded by student housing, and to the north, residential areas.

"You've got a strip down the middle, the downtown area. I don't see how something in between those two groups of populations could die because people have to commute through that section," Billinger said.

In addition, downtown is the home for several anchor services to attract people, such as the post office, public library, police station, banks and the nearby university.

"We've got those things that will probably never move out, so there will be activity down here," Billinger said.

Unity and support among the merchants is something that cannot be found everywhere, Billinger said.

Although shopping centers such as The Mall also look out for each other, that cannot be found in every retail business area, he said.

"There's some sections of Hays where you can have a business and you're in it for yourself."

"In downtown Hays, there's 240 businesses working together to promote this area," he said.

Parents, new students to visit FHSU campus for weekend of activities

By Nob Kuramori
Staff writer

Tomorrow, parents of Fort Hays State students and prospective students will come to see what the college looks like.

Parents Day and Visitation Day which was newly renamed from the previous title of "Senior / Transfer Day," is set for Saturday, Oct. 20.

Visitation and Parents' Day is coordinated with different activities and different schedules for different types of students.

Herbert L. Songer, assistant vice president for Student Affairs and coordinator of Visitation Day, said he was expecting parents and prospective students for Visitation Day, including high school seniors, sophomores at two year colleges and transfer students.

The activities for Visitation Day include separate sessions for parents and students, the president's reception, a campus tour, and the Tiger football game (FHSU versus New Mexico Highlands) and more.

The university provides various sessions for both prospective students and their parents to attend separately in order for them to receive more specific information.

The "Parents Session" will be held 9:30 to 10 a.m. in the Memorial Union Stouffer Lounge, regarding financial aid, career development and placement services, scholarships and residential life information.

While parents are in this session, their sons and daughters will be welcomed by President Edward Hammond, James Dawson, vice president for student affairs; and Erik Sandstrom, student body president, and also will receive information for the day from Songer.

At 10 a.m. "Student to Student," a 50-minute panel discussion, will be held for prospective students by Financial Assistance/Scholarships, Residential Life, Career Development and Placement Services, and Admissions.

At 11 a.m. students will attend their first session of the day which is called the "Departmental Session." It will provide opportunities for students to visit with faculty members who are representing the academic departments. The session will be held in the union.

Parents also have the same opportunity to visit with the university faculty members along with their children, or they may attend the President's Reception instead.

Songer said rather than current students on Parents' Day, prospective students would be shown more about the university in general, and also might talk more specifically with academic people about what is offered in the area.

Registration for Visitation Day will begin at 9 a.m.

In addition, Songer said there will be arrangements made for housing for those parents and prospective students who will arrive to spend Friday night. Songer said visiting students may room with current FHSU students, so they will receive more information from their roommates.

Irrational fear

Physical attack not our greatest threat

Do not let your fear control you. Rumors of rape have been running rampant this past week. Women on campus, especially students, are afraid. Fear can be a healthy thing, keeping people on their toes when dangerous situations are known to exist. But fear can also be harmful, causing people to over-react and live unnecessarily in not just fear, but downright hysteria. If this is how we choose to live — staying at home behind locked doors, clutching whatever weapons we think would protect us, not searching for the facts behind the rumors — then we are already lost. They have already won. But that is not how it has to be. We can fight back. We can show them that we are not afraid. We can do this through the strength of knowledge and numbers. But we must act now, for they already have the advantage of fear.

Use common sense and, most of all, do not let your fear control you. Never go out at night alone, no matter how short your trip may be; check inside your car before you get in; keep some kind of weapon — your keys, a pen, anything that could do damage — in hand.

And don't be afraid to use it, because if you are, they will hurt you far worse than you could ever hurt them.

Hayden lacks qualifications for 2nd term

Dear editor:

When choosing a candidate for public office, our first consideration must be his integrity. In the case of the governor, this is most important because you not only elect a governor, but also have to live with his appointments.

Mike Hayden has said that he is "pro-choice" which means that he thinks a woman should be able to kill her pre-born child. At one time he quietly accepted the notion that people thought he was pro-life. Mike Hayden cannot be depended on to use good judgement when he has such a disregard for human life. And it shows in his record.

He had a lot to do with the property tax mess the state is in. He has all the answers now that he is campaigning for a second term, but was lame during his first term.

After the 1986 Federal Tax Reform Act the state realized a $135 million windfall. The new tax money came to the state because no one lifted a finger to change Kansas income tax laws, until they were pressured to do so, resulting in higher state income taxes.

The fact that Mike Hayden served in Vietnam doesn't make him a leader. A true leader must have the courage to do what is right and not what he perceives to be popular.

Mike Hayden does not deserve a second term as Governor of Kansas.

FHSU support appreciated during fund drive

Dear editor:

The city of Ellis was fortunate on Tuesday night, Oct. 9, to have the assistance of the Delta Zeta sorority, Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity and the V.I.P.s, who canvassed our community for United Way funds.

Many local people have remarked to me that they were impressed with their courteous manner and the way in which they conducted themselves.

Chuck Wilhelm, director of communication disorders, was in charge of the Fort Hays State group and his fine leadership and talent in working with students were very valuable in helping us raise $1,372.88 that night. This, in spite of the fact that many people were not home at the time.

I believe the impression left on the people of Ellis by these fine FHSU people speaks very well, both for the university and the Greek system.

Thanks to each of you who helped. You know who you are!

Bad TV underestimates public intelligence

Have you had an opportunity to even glance at television yet this fall? If you are like me, a glance is about all you have seen.

That small portion of the new shows I have seen is enough to make me want to toss my lunch.

I think the people in the television industry are drastically underestimating the intelligence and taste of the American public. At least I hope so.

The first program I saw that totally blew my mind, and stomach, was "Cop Rock." This program has got to be a joke. What ever plot there could possibly be in this show is completely lost in the moronic musical touch. Any realism they could possibly be looking for is destroyed. On top of that, the music is not that good.

"Miami Vice" was bad enough but at least Sonny and Tubbs didn't stop in the middle of a bust to sing to the bad guys. And the music was not distracting.

Another thing I have noticed is the number of shows aimed at the "New Kids on the Block" generation. This mostly includes 11 to 13-year-old girls.

One example I saw was "Ferris Bueller." I actually got completely through this show (as opposed to 10 minutes of "Cop Rock"). I blame the fact that I withstood this program on mid-term stress.

I almost enjoyed the actor who played Ferris, but I think that could be my tendency towards younger men coming out. I mean he was kinda cute.

The story itself was saccharine. It was all about how Ferris and his adorable little girlfriend go around the school administration, his parents, his sister and the law to give their friend a birthday party he would never forget.

The only problem was they broke into the principal's house to have the party, the house gets destroyed and the principal comes home early. Ferris gets off without punishment, his friend gets expelled (which brings him closer to his parents), and everything is peachy-keen.

My favorite touch was the moral at the end of the story. Ferris admitted his guilt to the viewers and warned us about following his example. It was cute, but how many teenagers do you know that would actually come out and say that they were wrong without being forced to by outside forces (parents, teachers, police, etc.). Most kids I know would be sorry too — sorry they got caught.

I know bad television is nothing new, but for some reason the shows I have seen this season seem so much worse.

Who knows, maybe I don't watch enough television. Maybe with more exposure I would become less sensitive and "Cop Rock" would resemble entertainment in some small way.

Bryna McDaniel
Staff writer

Maybe "Ferris Bueller" would have some greater redeeming quality besides a cute actor and a semi-cute plot.

I'm sure it's all in my head. I'm sure I'm wrong about the whole thing. I have been wrong before. I hated "Alf" and look how far that got.

Defeating prejudice needs personal evaluation

Prejudice is defined as "an irrational attitude of hostility directed against an individual, a group, a race or their supposed characteristics."

I am of black, Mexican and American Indian descent. I have never really thought of myself as being different nor have I really ever been in a situation where I felt the consequences of prejudicial behavior until recently.

Perhaps I have been naive to think that people would treat me, or minorities in general, the same as any other person. I did not think people would treat us differently simply as a result of being born with a different color of skin, until recently, when my brother was judged on this aspect alone.

Minorities deserve every God-given right as human beings. We ask for no more than that. We want to be treated as equals and judged upon our individual qualities.

We do not want to be stereotyped. People sometimes do not understand that prejudice hurts. It is painful and is detrimental to all those who come in contact with it.

The mere color of someone's skin does not make them superior nor inferior to another person.

Throughout my life, my parents have often told me that as long as I worked hard and was an upstanding, law abiding and giving individual, people would accept me for who I was. They would often say "people won't judge you on what you are (black, Mexican, American Indian), but on who you are ... the kind of person you are."

My parents are very optimistic and always give people the benefit of the doubt. Although my parents and their ancestors have been through much turmoil in their lives, they continue to encourage us to give people of all races a chance, by getting to know them on an individual basis before passing judgment.

Our family is a great mixing pot. We have members that are black, Mexican, Indian, German, Irish and Swedish. We have grown to love and depend upon one another.

I believe it is appropriate, on the eve of Parents' Day, to encourage each college student and their parents to evaluate their ideas on prejudice in today's society.

I encourage individuals to take the time to learn more about the minorities on campus. Take advantage of the opportunity to expand your horizons.

Let it be said that not everyone elicits the ideas of prejudice. There are many, many people who respect individuals of every race and nationality.

Christina Humphrey
Sports editor

I look forward to the day when the words of Martin Luther King Jr. will ring true throughout the land, that people will be "judged, not by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character."

American troops spoiled by creature comforts

The image of the United States soldier brings to mind the heroes of war — silhouettes of Marines raising the flag at Iwo Jima, POWs enduring suffering at the hands of the Viet Cong, young men digging in under fire far from home.

American troops have been in Saudi Arabia for three months now, standing up to the harshness of walking the edge of war.

Our brave men in the Middle East are enduring such harsh realities as rough toilet paper, melting chocolates and boredom.

Yes, folks, those heroic men protecting our allies' oil interests in the Middle East are complaining about pancy creature comforts.

And worse yet, we respond. In the early days of Operation Desert Shield, Coca-Cola donated cases of its drink to the American Soldiers.

Soldiers began complaining their government-issue chocolates melted too fast in the Saudi sun.

The government is now searching for chocolates that won't melt so fast. In recent days, a Phoenix, Ariz., radio station launched "Operation Two-Ply" in response to soldiers' complaints that the government-issued toilet paper was not soft enough.

The station began taking donations of toilet paper to send to our boys overseas.

I say tough. Literally.

Somewhere between the last "war" and the Middle East situation, our fighting men have lost the image that drove them on to victory.

At one time, serving your country was an honor, a duty. Now it's just another way to earn more money and get a start on a career. Combat was rarely a situation to consider.

And now our soldiers are facing the heat of a war started by a man who has been compared to Hitler.

Are our men ready for such a fight, or have our armed forces become too soft for the harshness of battle?

Toilet paper and chocolates. You be the judge.

Paving

lighting on Main Street will also be a benefit in keeping downtown alive.

The decision to renovate Main Street actually got its start a few years ago, when a consultant group from Denver made suggestions on how to improve the downtown area.

Plans for various projects were made, but had to be put aside because funding was not available, Billinger said.

Then, last spring, the Hays City Commission decided to begin renovations of some city streets, including Main.

At that point, the BID pulled the plans out of the files and showed them to the city commission, who liked the proposals.

The commission voted for the option of brick paver streets, concrete paver crosswalks and concrete parking strips. Other options included using asphalt or concrete only.

The accepted bid came from Allied Inc., 503 E. 10th Street, at about $690,000.

The brick pavers were chosen for two reasons, Billinger said — longevity and nostalgia.

The brick pavers are expected to last 50 years, Billinger said. Other surfaces would require major work about every five years.

Main Street was badly in need of the work, Billinger said.

"I didn't realize how bad Main Street was," he said.

Large cracks in the surface were apparent in only certain parts of the street, Billinger said, but once the work began, it became apparent that the condition was all along Main.

"It's a slow process. A lot of people just didn't realize the street was depreciated because they saw it every day. Then when they see a big change like this it changes some attitudes," he said.

The brick look also enhances the Old West image of downtown Hays, Billinger said.

"For downtown areas, it seems best nowadays to restore buildings, especially in historical areas like we've got," Billinger said.

Included in the project was new lighting, installed by Midwest Energy, 1330 Canterbury Road. Midwest Energy will maintain the lights.

Many people in the city initially disliked the Main Street renovation because of cost or the choice of surfaces. Those attitudes began to change once the new look began to take shape, Billinger said.

After the first two street sections were bricked, and even before the lighting was completed, Billinger noticed a change of opinion, he said.

The attractiveness of the new Main Street should help attract new businesses and customers to downtown, Billinger said.

There is both a mental and physical aspect to the improvements, he said.

"The mental aspect is the fact that if we're spending that kind of money and making those improvements downtown they know there's a lot of heart."

"The physical aspect is obvious. You're going to buy a clean car before you buy a dirty car. So if the streets are cleaned up and good looking that's going to help make the storefront look better," he said.

Empty buildings along Main even look better now, he said.

"Some of the vacant buildings look occupied because the area is cleaned up now," he said.

The BID already received several inquiries from businesses interested in locating downtown.

"One thing that intrigued me was that when the last barricade was taken down, I was driving down Main Street and I saw a guy with paper and pencil. He was looking at the sign on the door of a vacant building, finding out how to lease it," he said.

Billinger stopped to talk to the man, who told him he already had an established business in Hays, but was looking to start a different type of business downtown.

"He said he was just waiting for that last barricade to be taken down," Billinger said.

"That was something positive immediately and I hope it will come in more and more. There have been a couple of people I've heard from since then," he said.

More than the look of Main Street will have to change in order for the downtown economy to remain successful, though, Billinger said.

"The retail market might be shifting. It might shift toward college students," he said.

The final brick bears the inscription "The heart of Hays 1879-1990."

"That word 'heart' is a big one because it can mean center, but in our case it also means character."

"It shows that we are interested citizens and that we're like a special community down here," Billinger said.

Kellerman said the purpose of Parents' Day is not only to provide them opportunities to visit with their sons and daughters and to spend fun time together, but also to visit with faculty members and administrators, go to the open houses to see some displays, or to ask for information about various programs the university offers.

He also said the schedule was flexible so that both current students' parents and prospective students' parents may attend the same programs, such as departmental open houses.

Kellerman said approximately 500 to 600 visitors attended last year's Parents' Day, and about 125 of them enjoyed the last program of the day, the buffet dinner at the union.

"Personally, I look forward to Parents' Day," Kellerman said. "Because we provide opportunities to meet parents and students."

By Jennifer Perez
Sports writer

The Fort Hays State Lady Tigers will host the second round of the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference this weekend. The championship volleyball tournament will be at Gross Memorial Coliseum today and tomorrow.

The first round of the tournament was played at Durango, Colo., Sept. 21 and 22. The Lady Tigers came away with a 1-5 record and hope to make a comeback on their home court this weekend, Head Coach Jody Wise said.

The Lady Tigers met Chadron (Neb.) State University in their first match today at 9 a.m. The tournament will continue tomorrow at 9 a.m.

Teams participating in the RMAC round robin tournament are Western (Colo.) State College, Colorado School of Mines, Adams (Colo.) State College, Chadron (Neb.) State College, Fort Lewis (Colo.) College and Mesa (Colo.) State College.

The Lady Tigers enter the tournament with an overall record of 24-20 and District 10 record of 13-3.

After the RMAC tournament, the Lady Tigers will host Bethel College at 6 p.m. on Oct. 21. All are encouraged to attend as this will be FHSU's final home volleyball match.

Sports in Brief

Reds take game two

The Cincinnati Reds took game two of the World Series Wednesday night against the Oakland Athletics.

The Reds won the game with a score of 5-4.

Billy Hatcher of the Reds went 4-4. Hatcher has hit 7-7 thus far in the series. Only two other players have had seven consecutive hits in a World Series.

The two teams will meet in Oakland for game three tonight.

This week, the intramural program continues to wind down the co-ed football program.

The playoff results as of Wednesday showed Old Dog Lodge with the best Wednesday league playoff record at 4-0. For Thursday league playoffs McMindes TFC is the leader at 3-1.

Soccer playoffs started on Wednesday also.

The playoffs for men's and women's touch football begins Monday.

Sports trivia started Thursday. If interested in the pickleball tournament, entries are due today and play starts at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Tigers set to take on New Mexico Highlands in final home game

By Christian D Orr
Sports writer

The Fort Hays State Tiger football team will complete their home schedule tomorrow when they take on the New Mexico Highland University Cowboys.

Last week, the Tigers moved their record to 5-2 when they knocked off tenth-ranked Emporia

State University by an 11-8 score. The win moved the Tigers to the eighth spot in the national polls. The Tigers were ranked seventh before losing to Northeastern State University two weeks ago.

Tomorrow, the Tigers will meet NMHU for the second time in history. Last year, the Cowboys won by a point.

Cortese said he knows it is going to be hard to get the players back up emotionally after last week's tough game against ESU.

Head Coach Bob Cortese said he thought his defense put in another good performance, but most of all he was just happy to get out of Emporia with a victory.

"My biggest concern is that I've found that the toughest game to prepare for is the game that follows the toughest game of the season. The kids realize that we beat the No. 10 team on the road and you can only keep that kind of intensity for about 10 days. I'm concerned that we, as coaches and players, will have a let-down because we'll sigh and say, boy we got the Emporia State game," Cortese said.

The kickoff is scheduled for 2 p.m. tomorrow at Lewi Field. Parents of Tiger football players who are in attendance will be recognized prior to the start of the game.

Klein expects great things from Lady Tigers this season

By Christina Humphrey
Sports editor

The season has officially opened for the 1990-91 Lady Tigers' basketball team.

The team did not participate in the midnight celebration with the men's team this year, but Head Coach John Klein said he would like to see the women participate in next year's event.

"I think it would be a good idea to combine the men and the women. I know there are institutions that will have a midnight practice that will feature both teams. I think that is something that would be really good for our women's basketball program," Klein said.

The women have been conditioning hard and are looking forward to the upcoming season with great expectations, Klein said.

"We're going to do our best to go out and try to win every game we play. We always try to prepare to win every game," Klein said.

At this point in the season, Klein said he cannot determine who will be standouts. He has several returning players and said the team overall looks good.

"We have a lot of good quality players on the team. I think the good thing about our team situation is that we have four returning starters and eleven kids back from last year's entire team. We do have some players that certainly do stand out, but I think the more important thing is that it is an entire squad that has been together a long time," he said.

Looking toward the first game against Denver (Colo.) University, Klein said he is positive the team can come up with a win despite his record of 1-8 in season openers.

"This is my ninth season as a head women's basketball coach and in eight years I have only won the first game one time and it was at home. Most of the time it seems that I have teams that open up the season on the road.

"We're the type of team that I firmly believe should beat every team we play. The kids are just going to have to be mentally tough and go into the game against Denver University and play their first game on the road and they are just going to have to win."

"I'm expecting a win, but the kids have to go in there and be tough and get it done on the road. It won't be easy on the road, but I am expecting a win with this group of kids in the first game," Klein said.

Overall, the team is prepared for a successful season and hopes to see good support from students and faculty, he said.

The Lady Tigers' first competition is Nov. 16 when they will travel to Denver to take on Denver University.
