Storm rudely welcomes students

Violent winds damage cars, dorms

Residents in the dorms received a rude welcome to Fort Hays State last night as storms did extensive damage.

Residents of Wiest Hall had to be evacuated after the storm peeled off part of the roof causing flooding throughout the building.

At approximately 10:45 p.m., wind gusts in excess of 50 miles per hour came through the area.

Terron Jones, director of the physical plant, was among the first to investigate the damage.

"The wind got underneath the flashing and lifted the roofing off about 15 feet on the southside of the building," Jones said.

Jones said the roofing was peeled down to the insulation and all the water appeared to be coming in down the walls.

Total damage around campus had not been assessed, but Jones said Wiest had received the brunt of the storm.

"This (Wiest) has been the worst. I've had people out looking at the rest of the campus," Jones said.

Director of residential life Steve Culver speculated lightning may have been a contributor to the damage of the roof.

Residents of Wiest were kept out of their rooms for about 30 minutes, then they were allowed to go back to their rooms to clean up.

Every floor reported flooding, some having as much as an inch to an inch and a half of water standing on some floors.

Wiest residents were told to stay in their rooms and not to go outside for fear that more debris may come off the roof.

Shannon DeSelms, Yuma, Colo. freshman, said he was outside when the roof came down. He said he heard a big crash and everything fell at once.

The storm broke out at least two windows at Wiest, one in the laundry room at Wooster Place and one in the kitchen of the McMindes Hall kitchen.

Terry Bell, Medicine Lodge junior, said he was unloading his car at Wiest when his front and back windows were broken out of his car by debris from the roof.

Bell said his worst fear was that he may have lost $2,000-3,000 in computer and software equipment that was in his car.

Marc Enyart, Montezuma junior and program director at Wiest, said he witnessed Bell's car being hit.

"I heard the wind, stepped outside and saw the roof come down on Terry Bell's car," Enyart said.

At press time, Bell was the only one who had reported any injury from the

Hammond addresses faculty Reveals theme for year

President Hammond revealed a theme for the 1984-85 academic year during his State of the University address at the annual Homecoming held Wednesday at Fort Hays State University.

At the annual Homecoming dinner, Hammond said the theme for the year is "Quality Education." He said the university is committed to providing a high quality education for all students.

Hammond also announced that the university will be celebrating its 75th anniversary in 1985. He said the university is proud of its long history and the quality of its education.

students for a 1985 to 1986. This year, 265 full-time faculty will complete 4,628 full-time students for a 17.5 to 1 ratio.

Our instructional budget has tripled over the last fifteen years even though we are serving approximately the same number of students," Hammond said.

Hammond also announced that the university will be celebrating its 75th anniversary in 1985.

MUAB sponsors family picnic tonight in quad

Amy Krob
Entertainment reporter

The Fort Hays State Memorial Union Activities Board is a student-run, volunteer organization in charge of entertainment for the university.

One of this year's first MUAB sponsored activities will be the ninth annual FHSU Family Picnic, Monday evening, today, in the quad area east of the Memorial Union.

The picnic, to welcome the new students and welcome back those returning to camp, will be held from 5 to 7 p.m. and is a welcome to the Hays community. The picnic will consist of food, entertainment, and a chance for students to learn more about the university, clubs, organizations and campus activities.

MUAB's purpose is to provide campus-wide entertainment, but it's a lot more than that. It is the only campus-wide entertainment group bringing in programming. It has a pretty big name. We've got our own group of folk music, folk dancers, and folk guitarists. I'd love to see a student at a picnic.

Editorial

This summer, the Hays City Commission tried to pass the ordinance which would prohibit anyone under the age of 21 from entering establishments that sell alcohol.

No decision was made this summer, however, the issue was given a six month delay.

The Commission will base their decision on the actions of minors and bar owners to see if the minor's in possession numbers decrease and to see if both students and bar owners have been complying with current laws.

It is the responsibility of all students, not just the minors, to adjust their behaviors.

If students under the age of 21 truly enjoy the atmosphere the "bars" provide, these students must remember many eyes are watching, and a new law could be passed if they are not careful.

The Commission is not trying to take away fun, but they want students to act responsibly.

Minors, take this advice. Order a pop, or get a glass of water. You may receive a few heckles here and there, but isn't that better than not having a place to hang out?

Increase in student fees causes a problem

Bob Gilmore
Sports editor

An open letter to FHSU President Edward Hammond.

Dear Ed,

I hope your summer went well. Anyway, the summer is now over and it is time to look forward to the fall semester.

I sure hope Fort Hays State has a successful athletic season. I know from talking to athletes and coaches how hard they work to represent our school with pride and honor.

It is the work ethic of all connected with the athletic department which has allowed them to make it as far in athletics as they have and that is something we can all respect.

I have one problem, however. Remember that 75-cent increase in student fees for gender-equity in athletics, which so many objected to last spring?

Well, as you know, after the student government association turned their backs on the student body and approved the increase, which will come to a total of $1.50 over the next two years, our good old Board of Regents increased tuition five percent this year and will raise it another five next year.

Ed, you had to have some idea the board would do this. I know you keep in good contact with them. Your skills as a lobbyist are probably your best.

I understand instructors will have an increase in their salaries to match them with their peers in other states thanks to the regent increase. I know you had nothing to do with this, but if they want to move, let them go. It wouldn't hurt to have new blood in certain departments on this campus anyway.

It's not too late to make up for your mistake, however. How about keeping this year's increase and forget about the future increases?

I know this decision is yours alone since SGA does not have the backbone to stand up for the people they supposedly represent. It would be a good public relations move on your part.

If PR is not something you are worried about, then consider how much the increases will affect students.

Not all students fall into the 18 to 22 age group. Some are divorced single parents who want to better their lives for not only themselves, but for their children.

Ed, it could happen in a cycle: the single parent can no longer afford to educate his/herself and in return the single parent cannot afford to send his/her child to college down the road.

In this scenario, you take away generations of dreams. Is achieving gender equity more important than the student body?

If the answer is "Yes," then keep the status quo and higher education will go back to the days when it was only for the elite.

In the broader spectrum, with other universities constantly raising tuition, our country will no longer be what it is today.

Ed, look out the window of your beautiful office sometime today or tomorrow and think about all of us little people down here and ask yourself if it's really worth it.

Is it worth a single person losing out on an education?

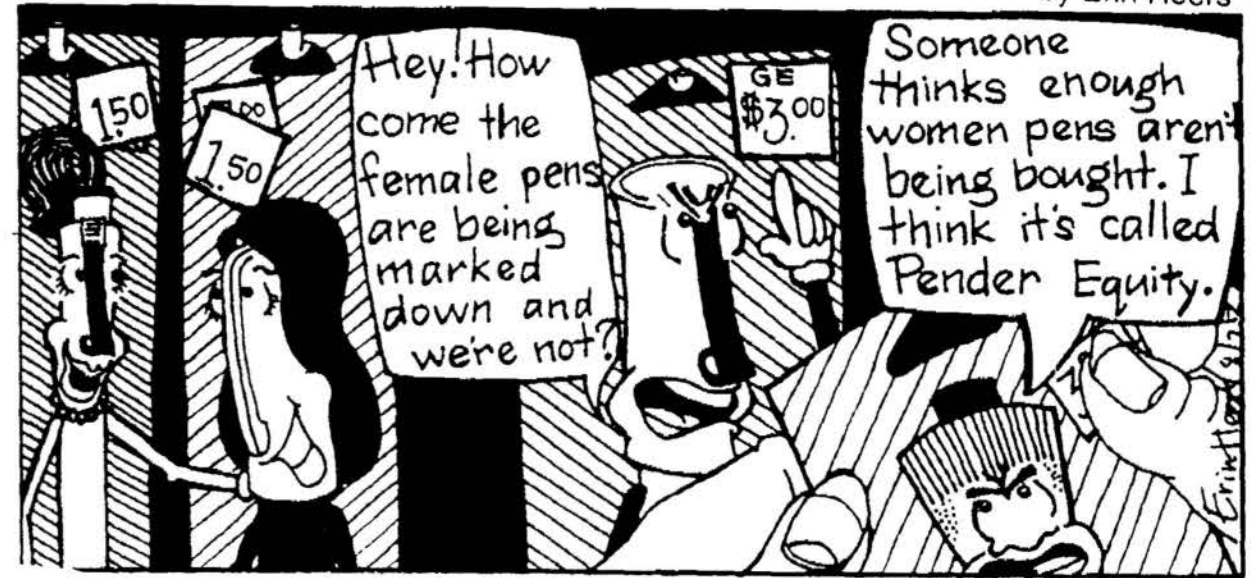

The 75-cent increase I'm asking you to forget about may not add too much for an individual student, but what will it be next?

An increase to cover the cost overruns of the physical science building? For further renovations at Lewis Field? For new student housing? The list never ends, does it?

I hope you read all of this and I look forward to your reply.

Lorenzo's Oil

Movie stirs many emotions

Donetta Robben
Senate reporter

After summer school, I took a good, old-fashioned break. I did not work—outside the home, that is. I refused to meet deadlines. I used to have a cleaning house deadline, but after returning to school in January, I quickly relinquished that one. Also, I actually slept in a couple of mornings—until 8 a.m.!

What did I do during my three week vacation? Well, I spent time with my family.

Oh, yes, I had movie days, held on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, the official Dillon video dollar days. I saw some really good movies such as "Scent of a Woman" and "Far and Away."

However, there was one movie in particular that tugged at my heart and stirred many emotions from joy to sorrow. This movie, "Lorenzo's Oil," is a true story about a boy named Lorenzo who has a rare, genetic brain disease called adrenoleukodystrophy (ALD).

ALD affects males between the ages of 5 to 10-year-old. It is caused by an abnormally high level of saturated fat. Everyone produces this saturated fat, but in ALD patients, the enzyme that breaks down this fat does not work. This causes the fat to sit in neurological cells.

It may be difficult to imagine all the activities I have done since I am more determined than ever to make all the ends meet and meet all my responsibilities, whether they be extracurricular activities or academics.

The fat will destroy the brain's myelin—a fatty insulation around neurological cells. The disease progresses quickly, destroying the brain's basic functions. The doctor who diagnosed Lorenzo said all ALD patients die within two years.

The story is about the struggle of Augusta and Michaela Odone, Lorenzo's parents. They simply refused to sit idle and watch their son die.

Immediately after diagnosis, Augusta went to the library to look up anything published on ALD. He found that the disease begins with hyperactivity for about two months, then progressively withdrawal and unsteadiness, followed by quadraparesis, blindness, deafness and finally, death.

Upon reading the inevitable, Augusta, played by Nick Nolte, experiences anguish and grief, but soon recovers to carry on his plight. He and his wife, Michaela, played by Susan Sarandon, begin to research all they can about ALD. They find a doctor who believes a special diet will work. The diet made the disease worse.

They consulted an international organization for ALD parents, this provides no comfort to the Odones. What they want is a cure and they are determined to find one.

They research all they can about fatty tissues, chemicals and their links to one another. The Odones increase their knowledge of genetics, biology and micro-biology. They become Lorenzo's doctors and chemists. They go beyond the medical assistance. In the end, their research and persistence helped Lorenzo and many other children suffering with ALD.

It is a story of determination, never giving up, never losing hope. What is truly interesting about the story, is when Augusta quits, Michaela becomes strong and vice versa.

It is a story about love. The love of parents for their child, the love of families and friends pulling together and the love of unknown individuals going the extra mile to help a dying child.

It is a story of struggle. The struggle against a rare disease, of which little is known—the struggle of marriage survival through difficult times—the struggle of anger and learning to deal with it.

Michaela alienated her religion, family and many times her husband. She also struggled with guilt since the disease is passed to males through the female chromosome.

The Odones prove that ordinary citizens can accomplish anything, if the will to do it is there.

This story made me think that nothing is impossible. All one needs to do is take the difficulties life dishes out and sprinkle it with doses of determination and persistence.

Augusta Odone used what he calls "a simple mind" to understand a complicated subject. He astonished the medical field with the depth and accuracy of his research. The international medical community recognized Augusta Odone by awarding him with an honorary medical degree.

The next time I am rushing around in my crazed, stress kind of way meeting deadlines, I hope to remember this story and realize, my problems are rather minor compared to Lorenzo and his struggle for life.

Interview provides encouragement

Kelly Freeman
Features editor

I had a day when you just want to quit everything, including school and life, why you have?

Every now and then I found some days the urge is so strong I want to give it, but then something happens and I always think twice.

Last week, before the actual rat race of school and work truly began I started to doubt whether or not I wanted to work on the Leader for yet another semester.

I have been a "Leader Loser" for a year and a half and felt that I had put in enough time. But what I did not realize until last Wednesday night during an interview, was what I would be missing the most if I did retire.

The people! I have no clue why it took me so long to figure out what I liked about this job, it really never occurred to me how important people are until last week.

Before this interview I was seriously considering quitting and that is very unlike me. I never quit! This interview was unusual and just the thing to get me back on track.

It was unusual in the way that I normally interview people in offices or over the phone. This time, however, I had the pleasure of going to the home of a Fort Hays State staff member and interviewing in an informal setting.

This experience was absolutely terrific. I have never felt more at home and relaxed in my life. The hosts and interviewees were wonderful and so was the strawberry short-cake I got for desert.

These individuals were polite, friendly, funny and overall fabulous. I can't describe how good I felt when I left.

I realized why I like to write and work with people. That interview gave

SGA ready for term

Donetta Robben
Staff Writer

Nate Halverson, student government president, wants to make student government accessible to all students. Halverson made his comments during SGA's first executive board meeting Wednesday at 5 p.m.

"Our meetings are open to all students," Halverson said. "We encourage freshmen to become involved by running for an SGA seat."

Anyone interested in running for an SGA seat can stop by the office on second floor Memorial Union and fill out an intent-to-run form.

Forms are due in the SGA office by 5 p.m. Sept. 1.

Halverson said running for an SGA seat is a rather painless task. "All one needs to do is make a few posters and they are in business," he said.

Making sure the SGA office is staffed from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. is another task Halverson is implementing. "In the past we have had two-hour lag periods," he said.

In addition, Halverson wants to make sure SGA is well informed. He is establishing a "chain of command" system to keep abreast of all campus activities.

The plan is to have a representative of student government on all campus committees. They in turn will report to their respective student government committee which will give a report at the weekly SGA meetings.

SGA is made up of four major committees: senate affairs, student affairs, legislative political action, and appropriations.

Committee meetings are held every Thursday at 6:30 p.m. at various sites in the Memorial Union. Immediately following, SGA meets at 7 p.m. in the Black and Gold room of the Memorial Union.

Activities begin today for SGA members as they make themselves available during the Back to School picnic. Their duties will be to set up and tear down tables.

"We also want to promote the Back to School Bingo," Halverson said.

Back to School Bingo is being introduced by the Hays Business Improvement District. BID Administrator Wayne Bilinger said downtown businesses have been looking for a way to introduce students to their businesses.

"Back to School Bingo" introduces downtown Hays to new students and enhances Fort Hays activities," Bilinger said. "We want to let students know downtown is on an upswing. We are adding new businesses all the time."

To play Back to School Bingo, students need to pick up a bingo card at any of the participating merchants and have it validated by various merchants, horizontally, diagonally, or vertically to make a bingo. Four corners does not count.

A drawing will take place at the Fort Hays State-Emporia State football game on Saturday, Sept. 4. Prizes will be $1,000 towards FHSU tuition or a $1,000 shopping spree. Students must be present at the game to win.

SGA's executive board consists of Halverson, Tracy Bitter, vice president, Wayne Rziha, executive assistant, Phil Covington, treasurer and LaNette Schmeidler, secretary.

Hammond proposes cuts

Stephanie Baccus
Copy editor

Fort Hays State President Edward Hammond discussed at a press conference recently his plans to make cuts in more of FHSU's programs.

The cuts, announced on July 27, are included in Hammond's 1992-3 Program Review, which was announced last spring.

To make the cuts, Hammond will make recommendations to the Kansas Board of Regents at its September meeting.

Hammond will ask for the elimination of FHSU's certification program in secretarial science and the master's of science degree in physical science, a release from the press conference stated.

The Board of Regents make all the final decisions concerning program cuts in state supported schools, and will vote on Hammond's recommendations.

Kwo-Sun Chu, chair of the department of physics, said, "We may have lost some enrollment in some physics classes due to the cut."

However, Chu said the program cut would not have too significant of an effect on FHSU. This year Chu said he is expecting to graduate a total of six students with a masters degree in physical science.

"And even though the program is being discontinued, we will give students in the program a reasonable time to finish their degree," Chu said.

In addition to those cuts, Hammond said plans had been made to discontinue the library media and secretarial science programs.

Cutting these programs would allow Emporia State University and Barton County Community College to provide those services.

"However, the university will delay its action on the library media program for one year to see if ESU can handle it and we plan to meet with BCCC officials about the secretarial program," Hammond said.

The elimination of all the above mentioned programs would complete Hammond's 1992-3 Program Review changes. Other changes included the phasing out of the home economics department and the elimination of the remedial English and remedial math programs, certificate in art therapy, and master's of arts degrees in art, music and political science.

New Faculty become oriented

Donetta Robben
Staff Writer

New faculty members went through a two day orientation last week to learn about the campus of Fort Hays State, what resources are available and what is expected of them.

Provost Rodolfo Arevalo said the purpose of orientation for new faculty is to help them learn what services on campus they can utilize to help them "comply with the rules as an instructor and become a better advisor."

During the orientation Arevalo explained the regional focus at FHSU and informed faculty that at some time, they might be asked to teach students in a Western Kansas city.

"Strategic planning," Arevalo said, "allows for growth opportunity and developing new initiatives. This movement which is very successful is known as TOM (Total Quality Movement)."

Arevalo said faculty seem to like this philosophy and use this technique for educational improvements.

"One of my intents is to take one of the initiatives we have begun in the past few years and see how we can improve it," Arevalo said. "We want to maintain quality improvements."

Arevalo encouraged new faculty to talk to their department chair and learn the process quickly if they want to become tenured. He said there are three main areas looked at for a tenure position.

The most important area is teaching. The quality of teaching is 60 percent of the evaluation process, Arevalo said. Next, scholarly accomplishment/research is looked at and university/community involvement, both holding a weight of 20 percent each.

"We want faculty to assess how our students learn best, we want them to become good advisors," Arevalo said.

Quoting Will Rogers, Arevalo said to teachers, "Even if you are on the right track, you'll get run over if you just sit."

At the same time, Arevalo said, faculty is allotted "academic freedom. You have the freedom to do research and publish—to use your expertise in and out of the classroom."

However, he said, remember "that students are in the same position. They have the right to learn and express their opinion."

New faculty, in their respective positions, as announced by the Provost Office are:

Started after fall 1992 orientation:

Dr. Joseph A. Aistrup, assistant professor of political science and assistant director of the docking institute of public affairs;

Dr. Rodolfo Arevalo, professor of sociology and provost;

Beshar Sethna, research assistant, office of budget and planning; and Terry Siek, Clinical instructor of nursing.

Previous part-time faculty members:

Susan Boos, assistant professor of nursing;

Richard L. Elder, assistant professor of psychology;

Rhonda Klaus, university nurse;

City operates on reduced budget

Commission cuts number of scholarships

Donetta Robben
Staff Writer

There will be 10 less recipients of the Hays City Silver Award Scholarships for the 94-95 school year according to Craig Karlin, assistant director of financial aid/admissions.

The city of Hays was forced to reduce their 1994 budget as a result of a state mandate attempting to control property tax increases. The state gave the city an ultimatum—use property tax levies for 1988 or 1989. The city chose, 1989.

During a budget work session, city commissioners analyzed line items to examine where cuts could be made. Commissioners voted to cut five percent from six funding areas, one of them being scholarship funding for Fort Hays State.

This means FHSU will receive $95,000 for scholarships instead of the $100,000 which has been funded for the past five years.

The city invested scholarship program provides 120 scholarships of $500 each to incoming freshmen. The program also allows for 80 of these scholarships to be renewable each year as long as the student maintains a 3.0 average and is enrolled full-time.

"This means that 10 incoming freshmen will not get scholarships," Karlin said. "We are thankful for what the city of Hays has provided in the past and we understand the position they are in. Hopefully, they will see this scholarship investment as a worthwhile program and restore funding in future years."

Hays Mayor Eber Phelps echoes those thoughts. "I hope the scholarship funding can be restored during next year's budget process," Phelps said.

He said it is a difficult budget year trying to hold property tax levies at the '89 level when the budget has grown in recent years. Hays Assistant City Manager Lanton Bartlett said property taxes are the main source of revenue for the city and to fund a current budget with property tax levies established four years ago is a difficult process.

"We have no flexibility," he said.

Bartlett said there has been a rise in personnel, in recent years and the costs in this area increase every year. Also, with the growth of the city, fire equipment costs have risen and additional law enforcement personnel had to be hired.

There have also been computer equipment costs, golf course expansion, airport expansion, swimming pool maintenance, plus engineering costs to fund a new exit off highway 70 to Commerce Parkway due to begin construction in 1995.

According to economic studies completed by FHSU and published in the city of Hays scholarship brochure, the city of Hays receives $28.70 in return for every $1 invested. This means that the city is losing $143,500 by not fully funding the scholarship program for the 1994 school year.

Pope John Paul II. The name sparks a feeling of enlightenment and inspiration in some, anxiety in others and hostility in still others. The first Polish man ever to be elected pope of the Roman Catholic Church was welcomed into office in October of 1978. Since then, the church hasn't been quite the same.

Within the first moments of his pontificate, Pope John Paul II was unlike his predecessors. The difference lay in his unconditional love of humanity. Time and time again he has been reported as possessing all of the human virtues present throughout the social ladder, seen in each of the various ethnic groups.

His respect, unconditional love and constant caring concern for all humanity has both elevated him to the status of figurehead, not only in the Catholic religion, but in people of all religions around the world. It has brought him down to the level of the common man, a good man which one cannot help but respect for his down-to-earth approach and ease which he radiates wherever he travels and with whomever he comes into contact.

In his fourth visit this year, Pope John Paul II travelled to Denver, Colo. to participate in World Youth Day 1993. The celebration began Wednesday, August 11 and carried on through Sunday, August 15.

proximately 50 people St. Joseph, 215 W. 13th St., St. Nicholas, 2901 E. 13th St. Ellis and Munjor took a group of approximately 82 people.

Renee Michaud travelled with St. Joseph's group. "I had a wonderful time. It was everything. An event of a lifetime."

Several FHSU students travelled individually or with hometown groups to the youth day festivities. A group of FHSU students met and caravanned out to Denver in three cars in connection with Tampa.

Chong, was a member of the caravan.

"I thought the entire experience was awesome. All of the people there, sharing in one faith. It makes you feel so much stronger."

Chong commented on the overall environment as being one of joy. All were conversing, though they did not all speak the same languages. Each person arrived as a stranger among the masses of people and left with a feeling of peace, excitement and a multitude of new friends.

The World Youth Day souvenir magazine included a section entitled "Speak Up." This section presented several conversational phrases in five languages so people from various countries could communicate and connect with one another.

Chong felt the overwhelming feeling of love which swept through the people and no one was excluded. People brought trading items from their hometowns and colorful banners could be seen in all directions.

Hundreds of thousands of strangers camped out together Saturday night for a prayer vigil at Cherry Creek State Park in Denver.

"Wednesday night was awesome," Chong said. "Everyone was dancing in the streets. We held up traffic for miles around."

Wayne Rziha, Tampa senior seconded Chong's statement. "There were people as far as you could see at all of the events. It was the most amazing feeling. It's not something you can really describe." Rziha was awestruck by the people and the enthusiasm. He said it caught on and spread like wildfire through each person's soul.

There was a downside to the mass gathering in Denver. Thousands were treated for some reason or another, mostly from heat exhaustion.

"They were dropping like flies," Rziha said. "But it didn't affect anyone's spirit. We just tried to provide water for each other as best we could."

All of this excitement was generated by the people alone. The pope's arrival provided a wonderful opportunity to gather and revive the fact that all people are capable of love and basically good when they take a moment to step outside the problems which social dogma presents and see each other as they truly are, Rziha said.

Enlightenment, inspiration and strength were yet to come as the pope addressed the masses of people gathered at Mile High Stadium in Denver for the welcoming of the pope.

From that point on, Rziha said, all would be touched in some way by the words he would pronounce in the days to follow.

He is truly powerful in spirit. You can just feel it," Rziha said.

John Rziha, Tampa junior, said, "The pope himself is a very impressive individual. He radiates enthusiasm, identity and motivation."

"The feel of Denver is not something you can really explain. You have to be there. We met thousands of people. There wasn't a whole lot to worry about. You feel secure and everyone around you is strong in his/her faith."

Whether the pope is viewed as a figurehead of the Roman Catholic Church and a man of extensive intelligence, or a simple man full of love and concern for each and every living being, his presence is one which cannot be dismissed and the profound effect he has on people around the world is something that will live in their hearts forever.

For more than 500,000 people two weeks ago, Pope John Paul II restored a faith in humanity that seems to be pushed into the background as the days roll on. For those people, Pope John Paul II returned the significance and value of love to the foreground.

'Buckle Up Sober' promoted by BACCHUS

Tammy Brooks
Editor in chief

Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students hopes to increase safety awareness this fall with their new program, Catch the B.U.S., Buckle Up Sober.

"This program is intended to associate the simple act of buckling up with other safe choices, such as not drinking and driving," Jim Nugent, coordinator of BACCHUS, said.

"In addition, the institution (in which the student is enrolled) will receive $300 worth of promotional materials."

The competition is broken down into the following:
•Billboards/Posters
•Public Service Announcements (which is divided into video, audio, print media and celebrity endorsements)
•T-Shirt Design
•Biathlon
•Video Stage Production

"A special award will be given to the institution showing the greatest percentage of increase in safety belt use," Nugent said.

Various colleges and universities throughout Kansas will be promoting Catch the B.U.S., Buckle Up Sober. To help encourage participation, a competition has been established for Kansas BACCHUS schools and students.

"The competition has been broken into several categories," Nugent said, "and the student winner in each category will win $100 in cash."

A student may enter in any or all categories many times and does not need to be a member of BACCHUS to participate, he said.

"We encourage any student to submit his or her original artwork which promotes the theme Catch the B.U.S., Buckle Up Sober," he said.

Students may work individually or as a group, but the prize money will be divided within the group, Nugent said.

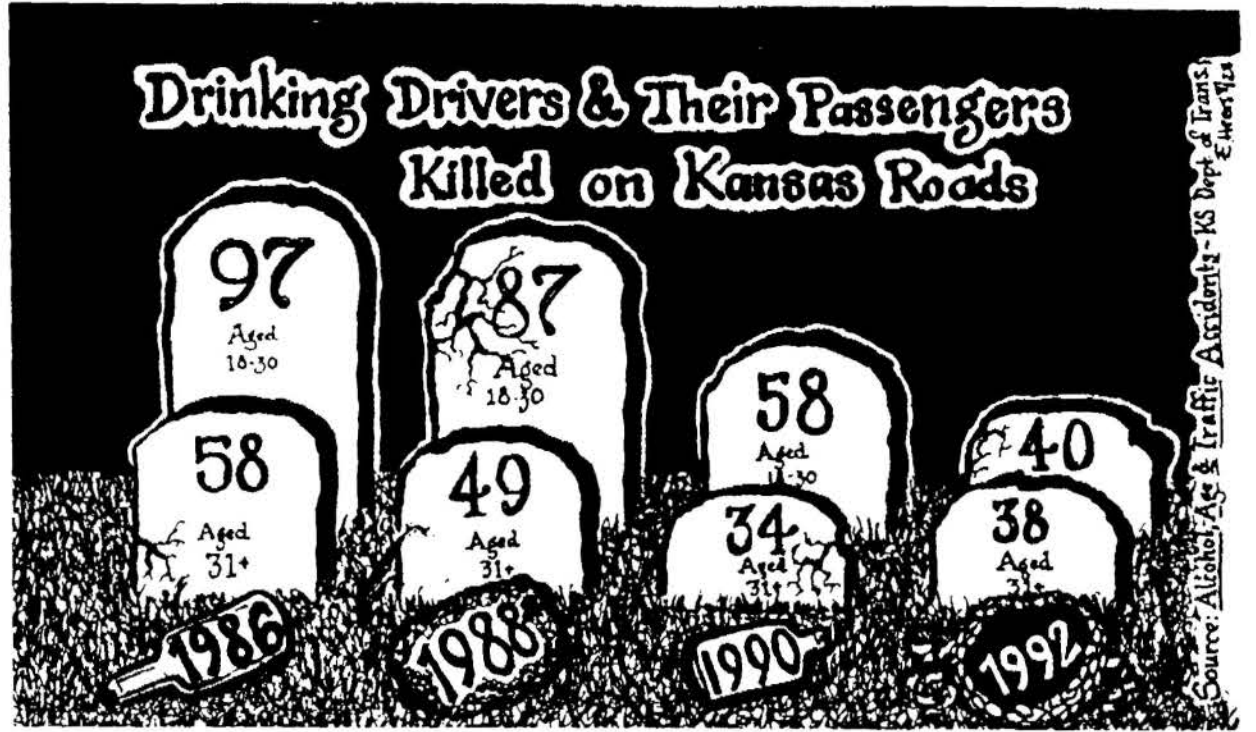

Interested students may get more information on the competition from Nugent's office located 202 A, Kelly Center, or students can call 628-4401.

BACCHUS President Shannon Berland believes the program could be very effective if college students would take the time to buckle up.

"We (BACCHUS) hope to get across the message of wearing seat belts even in short distances because most accidents happen within 20 miles of our homes," Berland said.

Berland said BACCHUS will begin the program with a seat belt sur-

BCCC offers medical credits

Stephanie Baccus
Copy editor

Students at Fort Hays State will have opportunities to take two medical courses now available at FHSU through Barton County Community College, Great Bend.

The courses are worth credit hours at BCCC and FHSU.

Starting this month, BCCC will be offering two courses, one in EMT (Emergency Medical Technician) Training and one in nurse's aide skills.

The EMT course is designed to teach individuals how to handle the psychological and physical problems victims of illness or injury may experience.

David Lake, BCCC director of continuing education, said the class usually "is made up of a very widespread assortment of people."

"Some want to be certified as ambulance drivers in their communities, because many small communities around Western Kansas don't have any or enough EMT's. Others are nursing majors, and we get quite a few who are into athletic training or sports medicine, too," Lake said.

Students who successfully complete the course will be eligible to take the EMT certification examination.

The class will be from 6:30 to 10 p.m. Mondays and Thursdays, and enrollment will be the first day of class.

Tuition will be $340 plus the cost of the book. The class will be in session "from August 30 through most of January," Lake said.

The nurse's aide course offered will prepare students to care for elderly, ill or disabled people in a nursing home or hospital setting.

Completion of the course prepares the student to take the Kansas Certified Nurse Aide Exam, which is required in Kansas to work in a nursing home or hospital setting.

The course, worth five credit hours, will be taught by Pat Hankins and will be offered three evenings a week from 6 to 10 p.m.

Cost for this class will be at $180, not including textbook costs.

Classes will continue from August 23 through the month of November. Both courses will be taught in the BCCC classroom at St. Anthony's hospital, 2210 Canterbury Road.

1993 National Safety Belt Statistics

•6.2 million motor vehicle crashes were reported by the police in 1992.

•3.1 million persons were injured or killed in these crashes.

•39,200 deaths resulted from these crashes; an average of 107 deaths per day.

•75% of all crashes occur within 25 miles of home and 40% of fatal crashes occur on roads with posted speed limits of 45 miles per hour or less.

•Motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for persons aged 6 to 33.

•Motor vehicle crashes cost society more than $137 billion each year. Personal and household crimes cost their victims $19 billion.

•30,727 persons died in passenger cars and light trucks in 1991; that's 6,024 more than the number of homicides that year.

•Lap-shoulder belts are 40-50% effective in reducing deaths and 45-55% in preventing moderate to critical injuries to passenger vehicle occupants.

•In 1991, if every front seat occupant had buckled up, an estimated 14,413 deaths and 122,000 moderate-to-critical injuries could have been prevented.

•In 1991, 100% use of child safety seats could have prevented nearly 455 deaths and about 49,000 injuries to children under age 5.

•Without safety belt laws, the U.S. was unable to achieve use rates higher than 15%.

•45 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have enacted safety belts laws. (Non-law states: KY, MA, ME, NH, SD)

•The national safety belt use rate reached 62% in 1992.

•Belt use in states with a law is nearly double the rates in non-law states-63% versus 36%.

•Use rates above 50% are seldom reached without emphasizing belt law enforcement and publicity about the need for enforcement.

•Fourteen states have shown that well publicized enforcement can produce use rates at 70% or above; Hawaii has achieved 83%.

•Canada boosted use rates in some provinces from 55% to more than 90% by conducting special enforcement programs.

•88% of people polled believe belts save lives and reduce injuries; 75% favor belt use laws; 70% say the risk of receiving a citation would make them buckle up; 65% (in law states) say police should issue more citations.

Students travel nine hours to experience different cultures and snow for first time

Kelly Freeman
Features editor

Three national exchange students traveled nine hours by plane to get to Fort Hays State and this year they will experience a first: snow!

The three Puerto Rican women are participating in the National Student Exchange program and arrived in Hays last week.

Lisa Heath, NSE coordinator for Fort Hays State, said the national student exchange program has been in effect here for approximately 11 years.

"It includes over 100 member universities across the United States, Puerto Rico and Guam. This year we have three exchange students from Puerto Rico," Heath said.

Heath said FHSU had seven students participating from here this year.

"We have seven students attending schools out-of-state and three coming here. Those are good numbers, but we have had more in the past," Heath said.

Heath said the advantage of the program is being able to get different perspectives of other cultures and climates. For FHSU students the biggest advantage is to be able to attend another university while still paying FHSU tuition and fees.

"This program is wonderful for those wanting to take courses for their major that we don't offer. It is terrific for them to be able to experience other cultures and climates and still be able to pay FHSU tuition," Heath said.

Heath also said she and other coordinators work very closely with students advisors and the registrar to make sure the courses they take will work toward their degree.

Michelle Vazquez Trillo and Michelle Aldrich Lopez both came to FHSU from the University of Puerto Rico at Huma Cao and Wilda Castro Rodriguez attends the University of Puerto at Rio Piedras.

The women, who are all related business majors, are enrolled in classes that will transfer back to the University of Puerto Rico in their respective towns.

The women successfully moved into McMindes Hall, enrolled in classes and agreed enrollment was very easy. They were pleased with how they had been treated so far.

Trillo said, "Everyone has been very nice to us and everything is going well. Fort Hays has a larger campus than Huma Cao and it is beautiful."

The mothers of two of the students traveled to Hays with them and said they are very happy for the girls and excited about the exchange program.

Rosin Trillo said, "The program is very good and this is a great opportunity for Michelle to be exposed to this sort of setting. She will be able to see there is a difference in the way we speak, but that we are all the same and are all a part of this world. The experience away from home will improve her English and make her realize everyone is similar in one way or another."

Rosin said the trip was very organized and they had no trouble at all getting here.

"Everyone has been very friendly and cooperative. We have been received with smiles everywhere we have gone," Rosin said.

Overall, the women said, they chose Fort Hays State because they wanted to improve their English.

Rodriguez said, "We understand that in Kansas, the people talk slower and more clearly and correctly and I want to improve my English."

Lopez said she chose FHSU because it was a small school and she wanted to share her experiences and cultures with other students.

"We come from a school with an enrollment of 1,500 and so we wanted to come to a small school to share with other students," Lopez said.

Trillo said she hopes to experience different cultures and share with people from different places.

The women are looking forward to meeting new people and to maintaining good grades while they are here.

Lopez wants to become more independent and responsible and separate from her parents more. In Puerto Rico she lives in the dorms but is only 20 minutes from her parents home.

Trillo said she is already independent but just 45 minutes from home, not nine hours. She hopes to maintain a good average in academics while she is here.

Rodriguez plans to take advantage of the opportunity to grow independently and hopes to become more capable of confronting problems that may arise during the year she is here.

The women have not had a chance to do much other than move and enroll, but are already learning about the Kansas culture.

"We rented a car so we could get around while we are here and we have become more aware of conservation by following the speed limit. In Puerto Rico everyone drives 70-80. Here people are more aware of the gas they are using," Rosin Trillo said.

So far, the women are not missing home, but they are sure when the mothers leave and school starts they will begin to miss their family and friends.

Lopez said she would also miss parties, the beach and modeling and Rodriguez will miss marangas music.

Heath said a dance may be sponsored so they can teach Fort Hays students how to dance to their music and students can teach them how to line dance and two-step.

What ever the case, the women plan to return to Puerto Rico with English improved, loads of new friends and much to share.

Carmine's replaced by Taco Bell

Professional Food Management to open chain in Wiest Hall

Stephanie Baccus
Copy editor

Fort Hays State students walking into Wiest Hall's cafeteria this fall looking for the familiar Carmine's restaurant will have a pleasant surprise awaiting them.

Taco Bell will begin serving its menu of Mexican food this fall in place of Carmine's deli and dinner menu.

Students can use their PFM (Professional Food Management) meal plans or Flexi-Cash to eat at the newest Mexican place in town, even if they don't live in Wiest.

PFM is the food service for FHSU's campus.

However, a student ID is not the only way to get food at the campus. Jenny Prine, manager of the new store, said the restaurant will be open to the public.

If a student or guest does not have a meal plan, he or she still has the opportunity to pay cash for their meal.

Physically, parts of the old cafeteria have been changed. With the construction done this summer, Prine said the serving area looks like "a normal Taco Bell," although the seating area is the same as before.

"The construction was done in the cooking and serving area, and it didn't affect the number of available seats," Prine said.

Gregg Morrow, campus food director, said getting a restaurant on campus was not difficult with PFM's resources.

"The whole project was a joint effort between PFM and the university," he said.

Morrow said a small committee of university officials knew students wanted a restaurant on campus, and looked over a list of available places.

"The university wanted to enhance its service to students and PFM has relations with several food restaurants," he said.

Morrow said, "There are basically two reasons why Taco Bell was chosen over other stores PFM has relations with.

"The first reason was because of the popularity of Mexican food, and the second was because there are no other Taco Bell restaurants in Hays, or really within any reasonable distance of Hays," he said.

"Mexican food is generally very popular and acceptable with college students and that's one of the main reasons why we chose Taco Bell," he said.

Although the store will open Monday, August 30, Prine said there would not be a grand opening celebration until later in the year.

"We'll have grand opening specials probably in late September," Prine said.

Men of the three fraternities play in the three-on-three basketball tournament yesterday in the parking lot of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity as part of the Greek rush activities.

Rush activities begin Greeks prepare to recruit new pledges

Tammy Brooks
Editor in Chief

Students interested in Greek life or simply wanting to meet many new people will get their chance this week when rush activities begin.

The three sororities and fraternities available at Fort Hays State have begun preparations for the events and although different recruiting processes are used, they will have the same goal to pledge as many students as possible.

The major differences between the recruiting styles of fraternities and sororities are that each has their own organization and their own rituals. Here, Sorger, Interfraternity Council spokesman said.

The fraternities are governed by the IFC and the sororities are governed by the Phi Kappa Phi Council. Sorger said.

When preparing for the formal rush, the fraternities are organized into three groups: Phi Kappa Phi, Phi Sigma and Phi Gamma Delta.

According to Sorger, the fraternities are looking for students who are interested in Greek life and want to meet new people. He said that the fraternities are looking for students who are interested in Greek life and want to meet new people.

He said that the fraternities are looking for students who are interested in Greek life and want to meet new people.

Last week, the sororities were busy preparing themselves for this week's activities.

"Rushing through a sorority during formal rush is a very structural process," said Kris Gresham, rush chairperson for the Alpha Gamma Delta house. "and it takes much time to organize."

Gresham, Halstead junior, said all three houses organize their rush activities in the same way according to Panhellenic and their own house's national guidelines.

During formal rush, all Fort Hays sororities have to organize three parties," she said.

Rushes will be separated into groups and will be able to attend each house's party.

A party is scheduled for each house so that pledges have a chance to experience all the sororities making their party special," she said.

Beyond the formal rush will be the House Party, an event organized by the fraternities, she said.

She said that the fraternities are looking for students who are interested in Greek life and want to meet new people.

The Interfraternity Party will be the largest event of the week.

"Monday will be the big announcements," Heath said. "We have been very successful in matching women to their first preferences in the past."

While the sororities have been making rush preparations, the fraternities have also been busy trying to rush new students.

"Fraternities are responsible for seeking recruits on their own," Tim Gratzler, Sigma Chi rush chairperson said.

"The IFC has helped a lot by getting us (fraternities) more involved with the enrollment process and by getting our name more known," he said.

The IFC has made a booklet available to anyone interested in learning more about the Greek life and the individual fraternities.

"We have tried to get more students interested in pledging by getting more over publicized," Bret Frerichs, IFC president and Tau Kappa Epsilon member said.

We hope the booklets will encourage students to contact the fraternities of the IFC if they are interested in going through rush," Frerichs said.

Matt Frozgate, pledge educator for the Sigma Phi Epsilon said his fraternity is doing a great job in getting men to rush.

"We have been concentrating on rushing men that have good GPAs and are interested in getting involved in sports," he said. "We have been very successful so far."

Men interested in signing up for rush may contact the individual fraternities for information or call Sorger at 625-4276.

Faculty member recognized for excellence in teaching and service

Zenger named '93 President's Distinguished Scholar

Amy Krob
Entertainment reporter

Surrounded by mementos from previous students and textbooks he has authored and co-authored, there isn't much of a question as to why Weldon Zenger, professor of administration, counseling and educational studies, was named the 1993 President's Distinguished Scholar at Fort Hays State.

This award is the highest honor to be bestowed on a member of the university's faculty, and when the criteria for the award was written out—recognizing faculty members who excel at teaching and service, with an emphasis on research and creative activities—Zenger had achieved and surpassed those goals.

Zenger received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Emporia State University, and an educational doctorate from the University of Kansas.

For eleven years, he taught and counseled in public schools before coming to FHSU in 1970.

"Here at the undergraduate level, I primarily work with student teachers. I have probably taught and supervised 1500 or more in the past 23 years," Zenger said.

At the graduate level, Zenger specializes in the processes of curriculum planning and development, helping schools to plan and organize for doing curriculum studies.

Zenger has also done considerable work in the area of textbook evaluation and selection. He serves as a consultant to Eaton Pitman's Publishers of California, as well as to the Educational Products Information Exchange Institute of New York.

Much, but not all, of Zenger's research and writing has been done with his wife Dr. Sharon Zenger, professor of education at Labor college.

Zenger has co-authored with her numerous educational articles in national and state journals as well as eight textbooks related to education.

The primary criteria for this award was in the area of research and creative activity, and this is what Zenger feels he does best.

"I like to research, particularly when there's a problem in education that seemingly can't be solved," Zenger said.

One example of how he used research to create a solution for an educational need resulted in the publication of three books.

These books have been especially helpful for service to school systems as well as for instruction in his curriculum classes.

During the early 1970's, there was a considerable amount of pressure on teachers and administrators to show accountability for what they were doing.

Zenger became interested and searched the literature through the 1970's and 80's for possible ways of planning, developing, designing, implementing and evaluating school curricula.

He contacted school systems of all sizes across the country, state departments of education and authorities in the area of curriculum development for ways of planning curricula and showing accountability for what they were doing.

While on sabbatical leave in 1979, he traveled throughout the United States visiting colleges and universities, interviewing professors of curriculum development in an attempt to further develop a process for planning and evaluating school curricula.

In 1981, he copyrighted a process for planning and developing school curricula. Three books evolved from that process.

One entitled Curriculum Planning: A Ten Step Process, 1983, was selected by the American School Board Association as one of the top 30 books published that year for curriculum planners.

The most recent book entitled Curriculum Planning: Outcomes-Based Accountability, 1992, includes information that is especially helpful to school systems in Kansas, and other states as well, in meeting quality performance accreditation (QPA) required by the State Department of Education.

Some of Zenger's more recent research which has been published in journals but not in book form include beginning teacher induction programs and alternative certification of teachers.

He served as Co-Guest Editor, for the State Curriculum Journal, summer 1992, on the topic of beginning teacher induction programs, and wrote an article on mentoring/coaching first year teachers on that same issue.

Zenger also presented his research information on alternative certification at the First National Conference of Alternative Teacher Certification in South Padre Island, Texas, April 1991.

Besides the presentation, Zenger also conducted a seminar for alternative teacher interns in the Dallas Independent School District using materials from another of his teaching strategies books.

His current research is focusing on curriculum/program evaluation which is in the final stage and research relating to trends for the 21st century which is in its beginning stage.

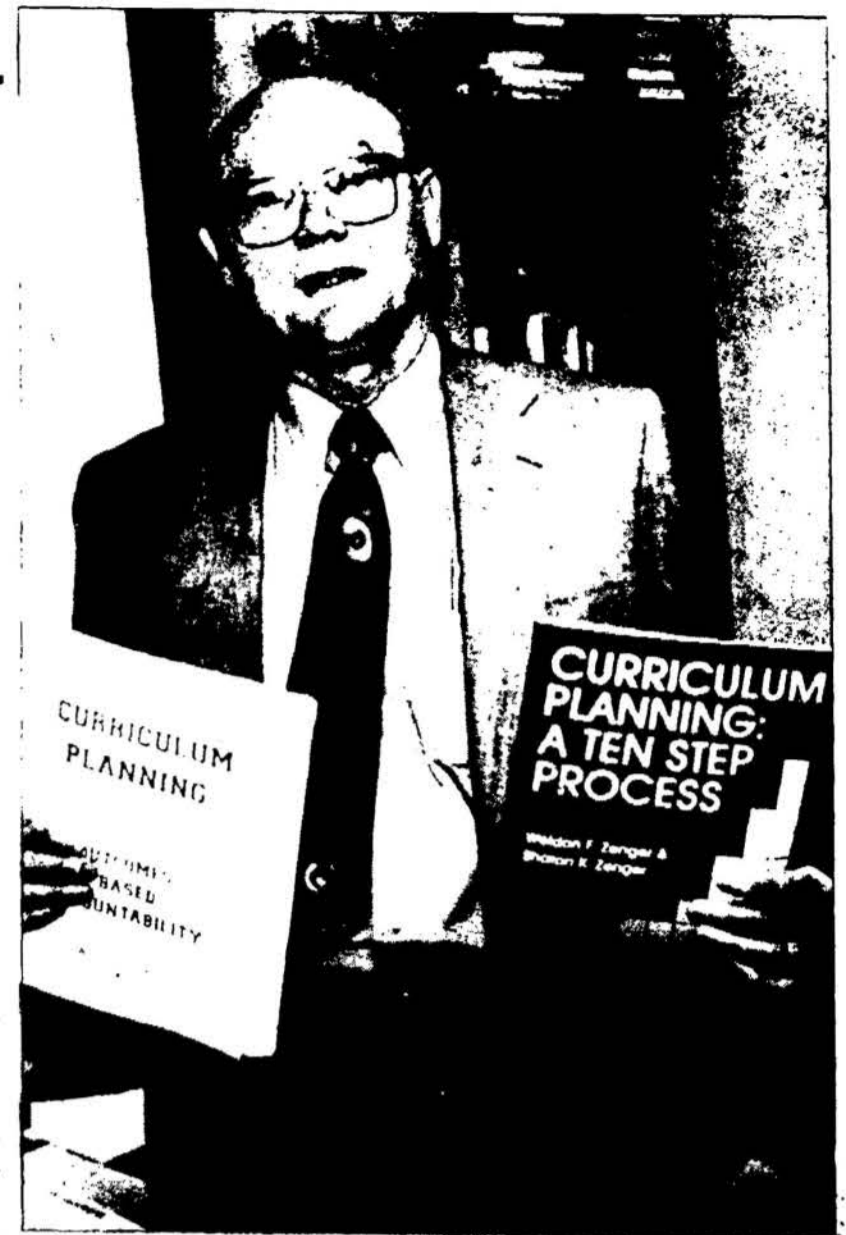

After seeing a need in the country's educational system for a curriculum evaluation process, Zenger developed a process identifying criteria, information needed, and collecting and analyzing that information for evaluation of new programs.

That process is currently being field tested by teachers and school administrators who are involved in implementing new programs in their schools or classrooms.

With this curriculum evaluation process, he plans to create a curriculum evaluation guide that can be used by school systems to assess and evaluate new programs and curricula that are being implemented.

The area of study that he has just begun is curriculum trends, practices and possible curricular developments for the 21st century.

This will include a review of the appropriate professional and educational literature, contacting appropriate educational and professional associations, state and national departments of education, as well as seeking ideas of knowledgeable authorities in the field of curriculum planning and projection process has facilitated the expenditure of $1.6 million on his development objectives, Hammond said. The increased budget is not included in the amount.

Fifth was the expansion of department autonomy in budgetary responsibilities and increase in department budget flexibility and funds.

Finally, the plan called for an increase in faculty and staff compensation. In 1987, salaries at FHSU ranked last among Kansas regent universities, at 82% of peer institution salaries. Today, salaries at FHSU are 91% of those at peer institutions and rank first among the regent institutions.

The president listed five reasons for vigorously pursuing these objectives:

- to remain student-focused
 - the need for continued improvement
 - to assess quality by the management of facts
 - benchmarking—the systematic search for the best practice
 - to give every faculty member the preparation, tools and initiative to contribute to the success of institutional goals
- Since 1987, Hammond said his efforts have been concentrated on adding value to Fort Hays State by utilizing computer-aided instruction, internationalizing the curriculum and establishing a leadership program.

All three initiatives will be impacting the curriculum starting this fall.

While the computerization has been successful, Hammond admits internationalization attempts have been disappointing.

It is still too early to assess the impact of the leadership program, Hammond said.

One initiative Hammond urged the faculty to support is making foreign language a requirement for all FHSU degrees.

"No student will be a successful contributor to our society without being bilingual and without having developed the necessary leadership skills," Hammond said.

Hammond called the future of value-added education at FHSU an exciting and critical time. He charged the faculty to continue to give their best in adding value to the FHSU experience.

"The bottom line is very simple. We need to add value to our students by adding value to the degrees they earn from FHSU," Hammond said.

Businesses due to open in Hays

Wendy Waldschmidt
staff writer

The thought of a new restaurant or store opening can be very exciting for the people of that town or city. A new business provides opportunities such as new jobs and a variety of new places to eat and shop.

Within the next year the people of Hays can look forward to seeing several new attractions opening up or relocating.

One major business moving to the Hays area is the Al Blank Industry. Bob Templeton, executive director of the Hays Chamber of Commerce, said that this company will produce scaffolding.

"This industry will help Hays by providing 40-50 jobs at first and then continue to build from there," Templeton said.

The opening is planned sometime in September, and Al Blank Industry will be located on Commerce Parkway by the Hays Municipal Airport.

Downtown Hays is starting to buzz with stores either opening or relocating to the downtown vicinity. One new store that opened is Sophia's Lingerie and Maternity Store, 809 Main.

9th Street is also the location for another new store for Hays, Regal Audio Video, 124 W. 9th. They sell home and car stereos, cellular phones, radar detectors and much more. Regal Audio Video also has a store at 1013 Washington in Ellis.

As for relocating, Something Special, moved from 1800 Vine to 1010 Main. Something Special is a home decor store that carries crafts, candles, pictures, kitchen items and much more. There is also a wide variety of wallpaper books to choose from.

It has been said that the Shoney's chain will be opening a restaurant in Hays.

Templeton said that Shoney's is definitely coming to Hays but he wasn't sure on a date for the opening.

Templeton said that the old Varsity Drive-In, 4th and Main, would be remodeled into a new drive-in. He was unsure of when these plans would take place or what the name of the drive-in would be.

With all these new businesses opening and relocating be sure to check them out and help support the community.

vey.

"Several members will stand on a corner observing cars that pass by to see if the driver or front-seat passenger is wearing a shoulder harness," she said.

The observers have a survey form to fill out and certain instructions to follow," Berland said.

"Another survey will be conducted at the end of the program and then those statistics will be compared to the first survey to see if there was an increase in seat belt awareness," she said.

Along with the survey, BACCHUS will also combine "Catch the B.U.S." with other prevention programs," Berland said.

"During our first meeting, we will decide on promotional ideas for seat belt awareness during National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week.

"Then we will need to plan for National Drunk, Drugged Driving Week, Red Ribbon Campaign and Buckle Up Every Time Campaign," she said.

Berland encourages any student interested in becoming a member of BACCHUS or becoming involved with Catch the B.U.S. to attend their first meeting at 4:30 p.m., Thursday, Sept. 9, at 200 A Kelly Center. Catch the B.U.S. program is funded by the BACCHUS and GAMMA Peer Education Network, Beer Institute Community Assistance Fund, and the Kansas Safety Belt Education Office.

Local sororities attend conventions

Tammy Brooks
Editor in chief

As millions of Americans celebrated their independence this fourth of July, hundreds of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority members from the United States and Canada celebrated their sisterhood in Chicago.

The Fort Hays State AGD chapter was able to send some of their members along with a few local alumni to the International Convention.

"It was an incredible experience being in the same room with Alpha Gams from all over," AGD President Jean Thill said. "It was very overwhelming."

The FHSU AGD chapter was one of four honor roll recipients of the Rose Bowl, she said.

The Rose Bowl is a scholarship awarded to a chapter with 55 or fewer members. The scholarship was given to GMI Engineering and Management Institution in Flint, Michigan.

"We were so shocked and excited to even be mentioned.

"It is a huge honor," Thill said. Individual students were also honored at a Scholarship Recognition Banquet during their stay in Chicago.

The Alpha Gamma Delta Foundation awarded three FHSU students with scholarships.

Jan Post, Ulysses graduate student was awarded a $1,000 Graduate Scholarship. Tara Pfannenstiel, Hays junior, received a $750 scholarship and Pam Norris, Spearville junior, received a $1,000 scholarship.

"I was so honored to receive such a prestigious scholarship from my sorority," Norris said.

"It really means a lot to know all the hard work in school and in the sorority does pay off," she said.

Those attending the convention were Pfannenstiel, Kris Grisham, Sedgewick junior, Thill, Ellinwood senior, and Norris.

The accompanying alumni were Hays residents Charlene Brubaker, Betty Calvert, and Kathie Keller.

Tammy Brooks
Editor in chief

Awards and more awards were what the Fort Hays State Delta Zeta sorority gathered at their International Convention in Indianapolis this summer.

DZ President LeAnn Meadows and CCD Vicki Johansen both attended the convention and brought home five awards for their chapter.

The FHSU DZ chapter was one of the top three chapters in the nation to earn the Risk Management Award for their social awareness program.

They were also one of the top twelve chapters to receive a Social Programming Award and a Financial Excellence Award. Plus, the sorority was one of the top six chapters to win a silver platter for the philanthropy program.

"Out of all the awards, however, the most impressive award we won was the Lisbeth Innis Francis Silver Cup for excellence in philanthropy," Meadows said.

"We were the only chapter of over 190 chapters to win this trophy.

"The convention taught me so much about Delta Zeta," Meadows said, "and I am so happy for the Delta Zeta to receive these awards."

The Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority of Fort Hays State was unable to attend their chapter's national convention.

incident as he said he had a few particles of glass in him, but he did not need medical treatment.

Several other cars in the West parking lot sustained damage from the debris, also.

Possibly the most extensive damage, however, occurred to cars parked in front of McMindes.

Nearly every car in front of the residence hall sustained a broken window, including Lamed freshman Tamr Wolf, who had her rear window and a side window broken out in her car.

As for the city of Hays, police dispatcher Alan Schank, said the only damage reported as of around midnight were tree limbs and street signs, but nothing severe.

The national weather bureau could not be reached for comment about the conditions which caused the damage.

The winds blew foam insulation from the construction site of the physical sciences building to the northeast corner of Sheridan Hall.

Team on probation

The University of Washington Huskies football team was placed on two years probation by the Pac 10 Conference Sunday for more than 20 rules violations.

The announcement caused head coach Don James to announce his retirement.

James said the unfairness of the Pac 10's investigation is his reason for retiring.

The probation will mean no TV money for the team this season and a reduction in scholarships.

It will also mean the team cannot go to a fourth consecutive Rose Bowl.

Washington was ranked 12th in The Associated Press pre-season college football poll.

Seminoles No. 1

The Florida State Seminoles were voted the top college football in The Associated Press pre-season college football poll.

The Jayhawks and Seminoles play Saturday in the Kickoff Classic.

The Seminoles are 24-point favorites to beat the Jayhawks.

This is the third time in the last six years the Seminoles have been the pre-season favorites.

Klein leaves, Mahon takes over women's team

Klein accepts Division I job

Bob Gilmore
Sports editor

After seven seasons as women's head basketball coach John Klein decided the time was right to move on Aug. 5.

Klein has taken over the women's head coaching job at Eastern Illinois, Charleston.

Klein said he made his decision for professional and personal reasons.

"There were a number of things involved. Professionally, it was a move from an NCAA Division II program to a Division I program. I would just like to see how far I can go in coaching," he said.

Klein said other reasons for his departure included approximately a $15,000 raise and working for a school in the Mid-Continent Conference.

The level of competition will be tougher than Klein has been accustomed to as EIU will play the University of Indiana and the University of Missouri this season, he said.

"It is going to be a tremendous challenge. I will be faced with the challenge of building another program," he said.

On the personal side, Klein will be living closer to his hometown, Schofield, Wis. Although, he said if it were not for the other factors he would not have left FHSU.

Klein said his players were the "hardest part of leaving Fort Hays State."

He said from his new office at EIU he has been busy trying to find an assistant and a graduate coach, but after everything slows down for him he will attempt to contact his FHSU recruits to talk to them personally.

"It's just a situation where you have to be honest (to his FHSU players). Throughout the recruiting process it was a concern (that he may leave)."

"No time is a good time to leave and I hope I never have to do this again. Fort Hays State is a great place to coach basketball. It doesn't get much better than Fort Hays State at the Division II level."

Fort Hays State is a great place to coach basketball. It doesn't get much better than Fort Hays State at the Division II level.

said.

"They're (FHSU) going to continue to improve. It's always difficult for a coach to leave when things go well," he said, adding that coaches are expendable. "It's just a matter of filling the vacancy. There's going to be bigger and better opportunities for Fort Hays State."

While driving to Charleston, Klein said he counted the opportunities he had to go to other programs. He said he came up with 40 schools that offered him a job or that he withdrew consideration with while at FHSU.

In the '86-'87 season Klein took over at FHSU going 14-18.

By the '88-'89 season, it was evident the program was headed to bigger and better things with a record of 19-8.

In '90-'91, Klein pulled off what no other Kansas women's college coach had done, winning the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics national championship.

Wise begins 16th season as FHSU volleyball coach

Bob Gilmore
Sports editor

Fort Hays State volleyball coach Jody Wise will be looking for some answers this season, her 16th at FHSU.

Wise's team, 21-22 last season, is coming off its first losing season since 1979, when the team went 14-19.

Wise said she thought she had found some answers with a good recruiting year, but then other questions came up.

First of all, first team all-RMAC outside hitter Niki Mock opted to forego her senior year, getting married and moving to Manhattan instead.

Then setter Cathy Chorus, who was transferring from Eastern Wyoming Junior College, did not come because of health reasons, leaving the team with one setter.

The hole leaves sophomore Jennifer Phala as the only setter on the team.

"She's a good setter and quick, which we like, but she's little. She's like 5-2, 5-3. That's going to be a problem for us when she's in the front row at this division," Wise said.

If that was not enough, Karah Dankenbring, a red-shirt last season had a head-on collision in her car, but luckily suffered no serious injuries.

"She's, luckily, going to be all right," Wise said.

Dankenbring suffered a banged-up knee and neck injury in the wreck, but Wise said she expects her to be back to normal by this week.

The team did dodge one bullet last week when junior middle-hitter Jen-

After a season of work that had Fort Hays State all over it, American cross country coach Jim Krob said he looks forward to a successful season.

Jim Krob said he looks forward to a successful season. "It's just a matter of how our new people fill in and how much we keep improving," Krob said.

Joining the women this year will be the junior college national marathon champion, junior Leslie Nielson, who transferred from Colby Community College.

"She will jump in and really help the ladies," he said of Nielson.

Among the top men newcomers Krob said junior Butler County Community College transfer Scott Mumson should help the team.

Mahon splits duties

Bob Gilmore
Sports editor

Needing to find a new women's basketball coach to replace John Klein quickly, the athletic department decided to call on one of its own.

Associate athletic director Tom Mahon will take over the program while continuing his current duties of internal operations, NCAA compliance and transportation management.

Mahon has served as baseball and golf coach at Fort Hays State, but it was his two years as head women's basketball coach at Eastern Montana College from 1986 to 1988 that landed him the job.

Mahon said he understands the decision to hire a coach had to be made quickly, but he said he believes he is qualified for the position.

"I'm pretty lucky in some ways, because of the lateness of the situation, but I also feel I have the experience and capabilities to lead this program into the NCAA playoffs, which is the goal of all our programs within the athletic department," Mahon said. He said he has had his sights on the women's program since coming to Hays.

"Ever since I came to Hays four years ago it's been in the back of my mind that at some point if Coach Klein would move up in the profession and the opportunity to coach this women's basketball program would present itself I would be extremely excited if given that opportunity," Mahon said.

At Eastern Montana, Mahon went 26-30 as head coach and 53-31 in three seasons as an assistant coach.

Mahon said at the press conference Aug. 12 he expects a smooth transition.

For one, he said he often went with Klein to recruit, making him familiar with the incoming freshmen and transfer players.

He said he also shares the same philosophies with Klein, such as a strong man-to-man half court defense and an up-tempo offense.

"With the girls returning, I don't think there's going to be much of a change. It might be in how we term things and how we address things, but as far as philosophies—defense wins ball games and offense we have fun with," Mahon said.

He said he has had the opportunity to know many of the athletes on the team while traveling with them.

"I've talked with most of the girls. They're excited about it. Last year when we were at the RMAC tournament in Denver, Coach Klein and I roomed together. I was there for the whole tournament and really got to know the ladies a lot better," he said.

He said he does not believe his lack of recent basketball coaching experience will pose a problem.

"Prior to coming to Hays, for 11 years when I graduated from college my whole professional focus was on coaching basketball. The opportunity to teach basketball and to coach basketball is just a lifelong passion," he said.

FHSU President Ed Hammond added that other coaches such as head men's basketball coach Gary Garner were not currently coaching when hired.

One advantage Mahon will have over Klein is he will have a full-time assistant coach as soon as one is found.

The addition of an assistant is part of the gender-equity plan, which calls for schools to have more equality in budgeting men's and women's sports.

"We want to try to build equity between the men's programs and women's programs, so we're also creating a budget line for a full-time assistant women's basketball coach," Hammond said.

The new assistant will have an annual salary of $26,000 and will have teaching responsibilities.

Mahon is also looking for a graduate assistant for the coming season.

With the extra duties Mahon receives an $8,500 raise to $37,800.

Football team looks to fill gaps

At the beginning of the football season there is good news and bad news for Fort Hays State.

The good news is the team is a lost one starter from last season's offense, but the team has on a three starters coming back on the defense, which ranked first in the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference.

The three defensive returners, senior defensive lineman Aaron Mata, senior outside linebacker Jared Marshall and senior defensive back Dave Johnson, were on the first team, RMAC, last season.

"We're going to have to find a way to round those three guys up," head coach Bob Cortese said.

The Sporting News named Fort Hays a pre-season All-American because of its defense, but Cortese said he does not believe that is going to be a pressure on the team.

David Cortese, a pretty good, old Hays pretty smart level headed kid. I don't think it's going to be a problem with that," Cortese said.

The numbers on paper look good for Cortese, will be at inside linebacker where the team lost all three starters, including unanimous all-RMAC selection, Dustin Bailey, an RMAC All-American.

Cortese, however, did say he has confidence in his defensive backfield. "I'm excited about our defensive backfield. I think we'll have better talent back there," Cortese said.

Cortese is the optimistic about the offense. Despite the loss of second team running back, and linebacker John Rutledge last season, the 44-yard rushing attack ranked him eighth in the conference.

Cortese is also optimistic about the defense. Despite the loss of second team defensive back and outside linebacker, Cortese said he has a good idea of what he wants to do with the defense.

Fort Hays State is a pre-season All-American because of its defense, but Cortese said he does not believe that is going to be a pressure on the team.

David Cortese, a pretty good, old Hays pretty smart level headed kid. I said he hopes a year of experience will help his quarterback.

"Usually, not always, kids that start for one year usually improve a little bit by the next year. That year's experience usually makes them a little smarter, a little wiser," he said of M. E. Warren.

Cortese looks for the offense to become more balanced than last season, when it was more pass oriented, partially because of the loss of Alfredo Hylton, who gained 1,135 yards in 1991.

"We're going to try to balance up more this year. I think we passed last year," he said.

The switch to a running game may give sophomore running back Clint Bedore more rushing attempts.

As a freshman, Bedore finished 10th in the RMAC in rushing with 480 yards in nine games for a 5.4 yards per carry average.

Despite the question marks, FHSU has been selected by writers and RMAC coaches to finish sec-

"He (Murrison) ran outstanding his freshman year at Butler, but didn't have a real good season last year, but I look for him to really help us," he said.

Among the top newcomers, on the women's side, Krob said freshmen Heather Cromwell, Raquel Phelps, Danielle Stos and Jennifer West should make contributions.

For the men, Krob said junior transfers Shad Case, Darren Viegra and Mike Zimmerman may help.

Krob said he would like to see

Schreuder get back to his early season form of last year.

"Jesse Schreuder is going to be up there. Jesse was our leader last year early in the season and he'll be up there running with Mark," Krob said.

The Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference is the premiere cross country conference in NCAA Division II.

Last season, Western State College (Gunnison, Colo.) and Adams State College (Alamosa, Colo.) finished first and second respectively in the men's and women's divisions at the national championships.

The season will begin at 10 a.m.

Sept. 4 with an alumni run to dedicate the new track at Lewis Field.

Sept. 11 the teams will begin the regular season hosting the Fort Hays State Invitational. Teams scheduled to attend include West Texas State University, Nebraska-Kearney University, University of Central Oklahoma and Cloud County Community College.

A new course will have to be mapped out due to the construction of the physical science building and the possibility of the low water bridge still being under water. Krob said, but the meet will be held regardless.

nifer Brandes was cleared to practice after initially failing her physical because of a possible broken foot.

Brandes was named first team all-RMAC last season, finishing fourth in the conference in attacks and ninth in blocks.

Junior Lynn Loschen returns from last year when she was named honorable mention all-RMAC finishing second in digs, averaging 5.8 per game.

With the lack of a setter, Wise said she does not even know what goals to set for this season's team.

"We thought with our recruiting we'd be a lot stronger than last year. It's kind of hard, today, to tell you a goal, with the setter's spot. That's like two of your starting six you're going to have to start over on," she said.

"We want to try and be in the top two or three in the conference. It'd be ideal to win it and that's what we'll shoot for."

Wise said she looks for Adams State College (Alamosa, Colo.), who went undefeated in the conference last season, to be the team to beat since they did not graduate anyone.

The team begins play Sept. 3 with a tournament at Washburn. The first home matches will not be until Oct. 7.

ond behind last year's champion, Western State College (Gunnison, Colo.).

In fact, "Street & Smith" ranked the Tigers No. 18 in the nation in its preseason poll.

The Tigers have the chance to prove themselves early as they play the same non-league schedule they had last season when they got off to an 0-4 start.

The had start came against Emporia State University, the University of Central Arkansas, the University of Central Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska-Kearney.

"That's as tough a non-league schedule as most teams in the country have (in division II)," Cortese said.

The team began the practice season in different fashion Aug. 13 running 12 110-yard sprints instead of the normal 50 50-yard dashes. Cortese said the idea came from the Dallas Cowboys.

"Instead of the 50 50s they have their guys do 12 110s and if the guys can do that then they know they're in good shape and they don't have to spend as much time in practice worrying about conditioning," he said.

The idea behind 12 110s is basically that it is not as stressful on the body, he said.

"When you run 50 50s that's a lot of running and pounding on the body and, yes, it tells you if someone's in shape or not, but when your done with it your pretty well spent," he said.

With the 50 50s, Cortese said the team lost players for a couple of days afterwards simply from minor injuries, such as ankles, shin splints and heel injuries, from doing all the running.

Team practices lasted from around 7:15 a.m. until around 9 p.m. for most of last week.
