Tomanek opens

Janella Mildrexler
Staff Writer

Yesterday was more than just the another day in a semester of college for one building. Students had their first exposure to Tomanek Hall, the newest addition to Fort Hays State's campus.

According to Wendi Rogers, Eskridge sophomore, her class encountered some technical difficulties.

"The electrical outlets didn't work. My teacher tried to use an overhead projector and he tried a couple. But, they have this cool electric overhead screen that comes down when you flip a switch. The classrooms are well lit. It is a very bright building, as compared to some of the other dark and dreary buildings on campus," she said.

Chris Walters, Ness City senior, had two classes in Tomanek.

It was, "a little warm. Pretty nice, I'd say. But, I didn't like how, if you sit in the front row, you can't see the bottom of the board because the podiums are set a little higher than before. They don't have any of the media stuff in, so it's not completed yet," he said.

Roger Pruitt, professor of physics, said, "From my standpoint, it's gone smoothly, but some other faculty, downstairs, complained of rooms being too hot and audio/visual material that was requested was not there. And there are no erasers for the chalkboards."

Martin Bellerive, Plainville senior, had a few thoughts on the set up of the departments.

"I think it's nice having all labs broken up into different sections. In Albertson, they had to share labs. And we got a whole group of computers and new software. Once they get the details down, like the computers up and running, it will be a lot better," he said.

Pruitt agreed. "I like the fact that the faculty in physics are all together here. Geoscience people are all together, not separated like in Albertson. But, I don't have enough room for all my books and journals. I may have to take some home."

Some students were more critical of the building's aesthetics.

Adam Lamprecht, Las Vegas, Nev., sophomore, said, "I think it's ugly. It looks like the Catholic Campus Center. If you're going to spend that much money on a building, it would be nice to get an original design."

Rian Sand, Hays sophomore, said, "It's confusing. And there are these places where, I guess, they're going to have planters, but it's not just cigarettes."

Bob Szrot, Hays sophomore, shared similar opinions.

"I didn't really appreciate that all the doors were locked and some student had to come and let me in. And I don't think you can print in the paper

Buildings across campus rekeyed

James A. Smith
Staff Writer

Some of the buildings on Fort Hays State University's campus are currently in the process of being rekeyed.

All of the locks are being changed in certain buildings, and new keys are being made and issued to the faculty and students who will use them.

The maintenance areas have already been rekeyed, as have Heather, Malloy, Stroup and Tomanek halls.

Completion of the rekeying of Picken Hall is projected within the month.

"Back years ago, custodial was in charge of all locks, but that changed," Sid Carlile, university police chief, said.

"After the decision was made to rekey the campus, however, it was also decided that we needed to hire a locksmith."

The lock systems specialist who was hired by the University Police Department was Lester Dennis.

"The rekeying has been going on for quite a while," Dennis said, "and it still may take another year or two."

"My understanding is that it is being done partly for security reasons, and partly for better key control. With the keys we're changing to, it's impossible for someone to just go down to the corner store and get copies made."

The keys cannot be copied because the key design is unique to the company that produces them, ASSA. In addition to the teeth on the edge of a normal key, an ASSA key has an

Convenient parking still a premium

Karen Meier
Staff Writer

Convenient parking will once again be a premium this year, according to Fort Hays State police chief Sid Carlile.

As of yesterday afternoon, Carlile said 1,530 Zone 1 permits, 780 Zone 2 permits and 550 faculty/staff permits had been sold.

While there is enough parking spaces to accommodate all the permits, not all of the spots are convenient.

There are a total of 3,000 parking places on campus, "but that includes the hyper and the football field. If you're talking about the immediate area, the number is a lot smaller," Carlile said.

"Monday, Wednesday and Friday, parking is going to be pretty much maxed out. You're going to have to show some patience," he said.

Carlile suggested commuter students allow extra time to search for parking places or to walk from Gross-Memorial Coliseum if necessary.

For students with Zone 2 permits who live in the residence halls, there is a dirt parking lot located east of McGrath Hall for overflow parking.

Carlile noted this area is not well-lit, and if students have safety concerns, they should push the button on a kiosk and ask for a police escort.

Carlile said the parking situation should improve.

"It takes us about two weeks to ticket all the people who are parked illegally and then it starts to improve," he said.

He also said parking should improve when construction outside Tomanek Hall is completed.

The parking lot, which is currently inaccessible, will add 40 Zone 1 parking places.

"Until they get the street finished, it's a real headache getting through. When it's done it'll be a lot nicer," Carlile said.

Student Government Association president LaNette Schmeidler said, "The completion of Tomanek Hall will enhance parking because we'll have the new lot but, like anyone else, we wish there was more parking."

Vogel named President's Distinguished Scholar

Dina Ross
Staff Writer

Nancy Vogel, professor of English, was awarded the President's Distinguished Scholar Award at the faculty orientation meeting Thursday.

Vogel will give a scholarly lecture during the Honors Convocation which will be during the fall semester.

The President's Distinguished Scholar Award was given to Vogel following an analysis of her performance in the categories of research, service and instruction.

"My theme was Leadership in Scholarship," Vogel said. "My dissertation about Robert Frost is what brought me here."

"One claim to fame is my essay on 'The Death of a Hired Man' published in 'Frost: Centennial Essays.' It's what the Choice card calls the best single volume of Frost's criticism in print."

"Robert Frost believed that the research lab, studio apprenticeship and the salon of good minds are the three devices for a perfect education," Vogel said.

Vogel believes her scholarship comes out in the courses that she teaches, which currently are English Composition, World Literature and Young Adult Literature.

In 1981, Vogel was one of the 75 Young Education Leaders of America recognized by Phi Delta Kappa, an honorary for educators.

"As one of the leaders, I became a subject in a Canadian study on leadership, which concluded 'success, whether in leadership or in other roles, is largely predicated on hard work.'"

"I do essays in state, national and international journals. I have some that are not published yet," Vogel said. "One essay by invitation will appear in a Scribner's reference set in 1997."

Nancy Vogel grew up in Lawrence and received her masters degree in 1965. She received her doctorate from the University of Kansas in 1970.

Vogel began to work at FHSU in 1965, after receiving her masters quit to continue her studies.

"I came to Hays two times, once in 1965 and again in 1971," she said jokingly. "I might be the only faculty that has come back to FHSU after resigning," she added.

Among her many honors, Vogel received the Pilot Award in 1986 and has been invited to participate in Phi Kappa Phi, a scholastic honor for all disciplines. Vogel is also a member of Phi Delta Kappa and Sigma Delta Tau, a national English society. Vogel is the author of the first book by a woman to have been published by Phi Delta Kappa.

In the community, Vogel is involved with the Hays Art Council, where she has been president. She is distinguished for being a board member of the Kansas Humanities Council. Vogel is entering her second year of a three-year term as member of the National Advisory Board for Gale Research.

Her published articles are many, including an essay on Maureen Daly - the matriarch of modern young adult literature published in the ALAN Review.

Vogel wrote the first essay to recognize the 50th anniversary of "Seventeenth Summer," published in the Nebraska English Journal in 1992. She is also the co-author (with Dale McKemey, associate professor of business administration) of the classic case on Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" for the Hartwick Humanities in Management Institute.

In the early 1970's, Vogel was one of the first FHSU faculty members to design and create a videotape in an actual class. Her students wrote the script for "Exitus."

Vogel is working on an essay entitled "Deep Time and Space Out West," and it will include information about the life of Charles Sternberg. It will be published in 1996.

Vogel has had offices in Martin Allen, Picken and Rarick halls, buildings from which she has many memories.

"When I first came to FHSU, the library was in the building where Sternberg Museum is today," Vogel

Tuesday, Aug. 22, 1995

Editor's Note: The "Generation X" and "Non-Traditional" columns will be printed side-by-side in every Tuesday edition of The University Leader for the duration of the semester. The purpose of the columns is to provide an informative and sometimes entertaining look at student life on both sides of the coin. These columns are for you. If you have any ideas or anecdotes, please write: Attn: Editor, The University Leader, Picken 104 and either send or drop the letter off in our office.

Generation X

Rebecca Schwerdtfeger
Editor/Columnist

Are you struggling for your independent status? Walking that thin line between making your own decisions and calls home to mom and dad?

If the answers are yes, chances are you are the traditional student who joined the college ranks fresh out of high school, having been told it would be your ticket to bigger and better things... as well as a lot of fun.

As an honor graduate from Olathe South, Kans., there was no other option for me.

Teenagers graduated and then they went to college. Only a very small percentage opted for another path.

Or so I was led to believe. I remember being excited. I was packed and ready to go in mid-June and spent the last two months in agony and anticipation.

I was going to college, going to be a journalist, get married and write my story of success.

Upon arrival I was thrilled. Everything was as I had hoped. I had some scholarships, a basketball court to relieve my daily aggressions and, of course, my thriving career as a hound (journalist).

I was young and on top of the world. Then I woke up.

My grades came in after my first semester. Not bad, but not what I was capable of either.

But why should I worry? I was young and besides, I was gaining a world of experience from all of the people I was meeting.

There was that little issue of the money my parents were feeding into the university.

What did it matter if I wasn't quite getting everything I could out of each class? What did it matter that I decided the teachers should try harder to stimulate me?

I was still classified as an honor student. That was all that mattered, or so I thought. Besides, I was all-knowing. I was young, after all.

Now, as a senior, I wonder how my peers approached their education and I have a feeling that most felt the same way.

Everyone was always talking about the latest party, and how hard their classes were (as if we should not be expected to work).

I see others on campus, different from those of us who are members of "Generation X," and I see a desire that was never fully focussed in myself, though we all strove for the same goal... to be successful.

I am not sure exactly just how this column will develop throughout the semester, but I hope that, for myself and perhaps even a few of you, it will be a starting point for one important quality... growth.

Non-Traditional

Dina Ross
Columnist

Is your car older than most of your classmates? Are you married? Do you have dependent children?

No, this is not a questionnaire to find out if you are cheating on your income taxes.

The questions above, if the answer is yes to at least one, will lead the university experts to identify a non-traditional student.

In 1990, as a freshman at the community college I learned that I was at triple (or quadruple) jeopardy.

This means that I was poor, female, non-English-speaker, minority, among other things that would put me "at risk."

I knew that my chances to finish a college degree were minimal.

I am a stubborn person, and the odds against me did not hinder my determination, but rather I took them as challenges.

Yes, many times I was tempted to quit classes but my self-esteem would not let me.

Since I needed a support group, I found it necessary to take the lead and start one.

That club began with just a few of us and now it is the organization with the most members in campus, at Seward County Community College.

My husband and children were very supportive of my education, and I used to take them to many meetings and parties with me.

I am glad that I had my friends and family, for otherwise, I would have become another statistic.

When I hear that someone that I care for drops out of school I find myself wondering if I can do something about it. How can I help? Can I make a difference for that person?

This semester, The Leader gave me the opportunity to write a column for the non-traditionals. This will not be my column but yours, the readers'. Your input will determine its success.

I would like to write articles that pertain to those who, according to FHSU's data, comprise approximately 42% of the student population.

I do not know most of you, but I feel like we are a family, for we have so many things in common.

This big family has the same needs and desires. If members have accomplishments, they should be shared too.

My grandma used to say that "Las penas compartidas son divididas y las alegrías platicadas son multiplicadas."

Of course she was not a mathematician, but what she really meant was "If one shares a sorrow, it will be divided; if one shares joys, they will multiply."

Letter to the Editor

A few weeks ago, a survey "when new faculty or staff are employed at this university, if they would be given a Fort Hays University decal for their vehicle?"

The result of this survey was that not many faculty and staff vehicles were supporting Fort Hays State University in some manner.

I, too, am guilty of such neglect.

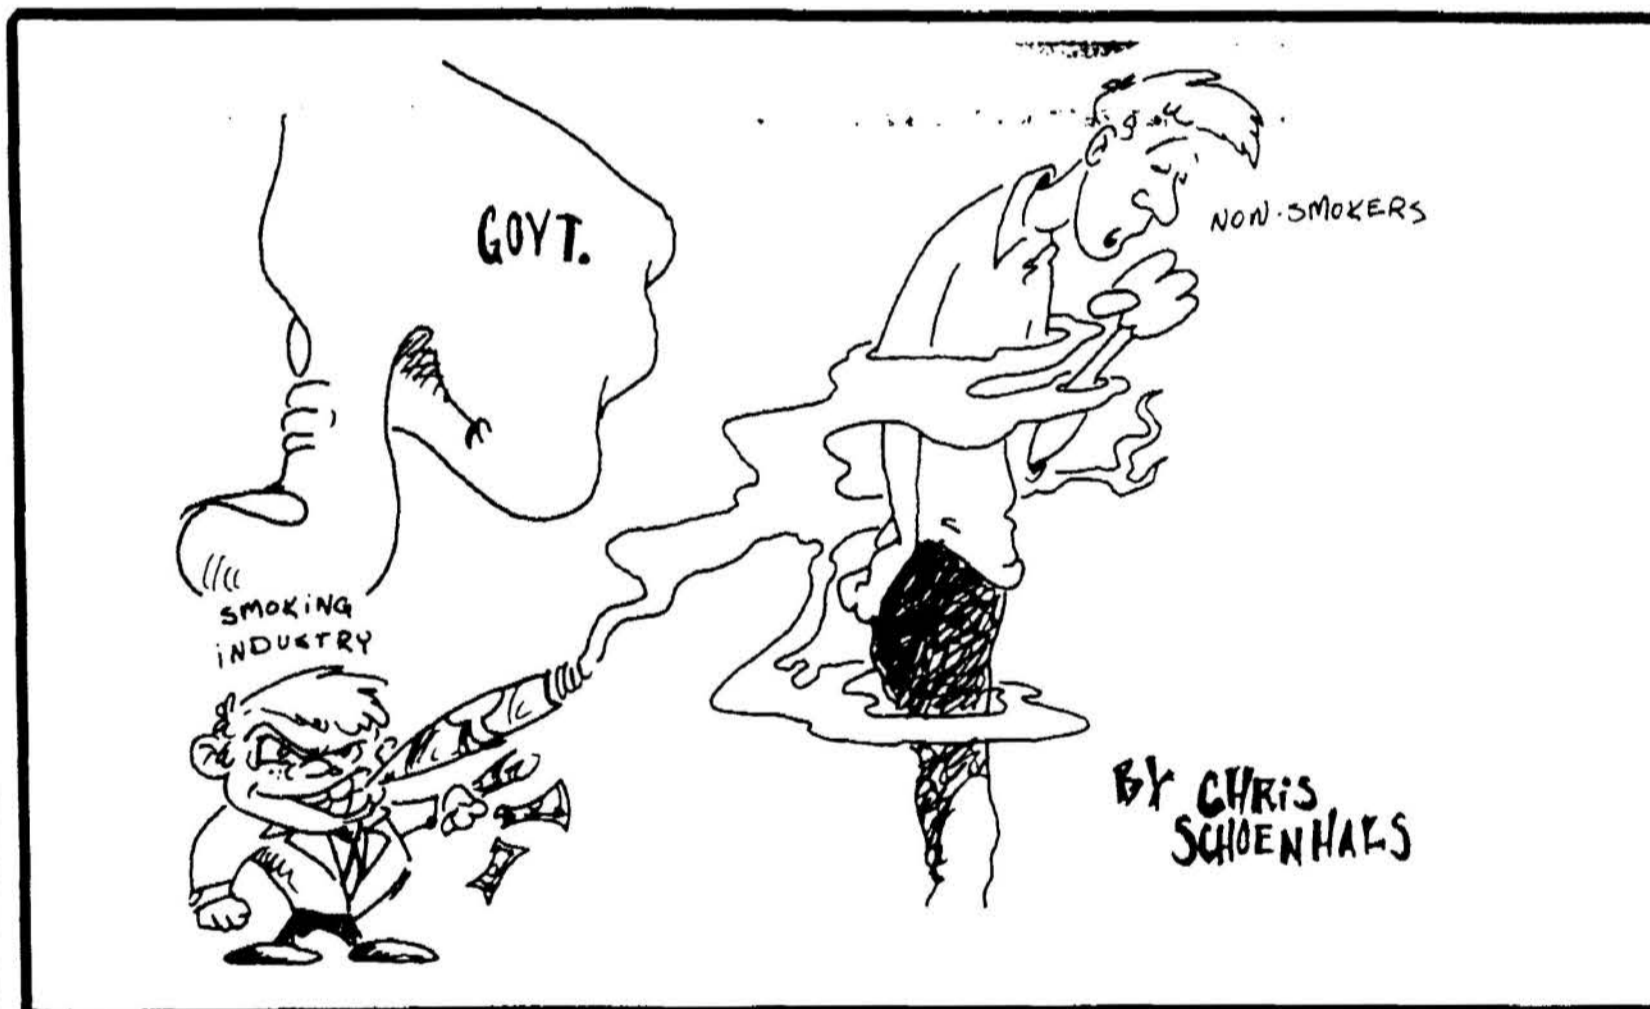

Wouldn't it be appropriate

FHSU student dies from complications

Travis J. Laudick

Laudick died as a result of complications from asthma.

Travis John Laudick, 22, Dodge City senior, died July 9, 1995, at St. Luke's Northland Hospital, Kansas City, Mo. Laudick was involved in intramurals and refereeing. He was also an avid hunter and fisherman. Laudick, born April 28, 1973, was the son of Roger and Nancy (Kasselman) Laudick. He was a lifetime Dodge City resident. Survivors include: fiancée, Angie York, Dodge City; parents, Dodge City; two brothers, Lonny, Wichita, Dustin, Hays; one sister, Tammy, Dodge City; and grandparents, Raymond and Leona Laudick, Spearville.

what I feel about walking and weasel-ing my way around the construction. Dr. Whitten made multiple comments about, basically, the postponements and how things weren't totally ready but they were livable."

Chuck Leivan, Plainville senior, said, "You have to use the West entrance, because of the construction. They should have a campus wide announcement about the construction."

extra sidebar of teeth that protrudes from the side of the key.

The sidebar of each key is cut at the factory, and the key is then sent to Dennis, who has a special machine for cutting the key's teeth.

Another advantage to the ASSA key system is that in case a lockout becomes necessary, an ASSA lock can be rekeyed in less than five minutes.

Currently, the residence halls and the Memorial Union building are not slated for rekeying.

Steve Woods, Memorial Union director, is not planning on changing the lock system being used in the near future.

FHSU theatre schedule

The University Leader

The Fort Hays State University Theatre has announced four productions on the theme of love and new season ticket prices for the 1995-96 school year.

Like other years, performances will be Friday and Saturdays at 8 p.m. with Sunday matinees at 2 p.m.

This season includes "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," Oct. 6-8 and 13-15; "The Normal Heart," Nov. 16-19; "Jake's Women," Feb. 29 - March 3 and "Prelude to a Kiss," April 25-28.

FHSU students may purchase a set of season tickets for $5. Season tickets for non-FHSU students are $10, and for adult non-students, $14.

Individuals also may receive tickets at the Patron, Sponsor, Angel or Benefactor levels by making donations of $50 or more, which are tax deductible to the extent permissible by law.

Call 628-5365 for more information or to receive a brochure.

Vogel

said, "There was a magnificent reading room with stained glass windows on the second floor; some of the stout oak tables can still be found across campus."

"Another fond memory that I have is when Maureen Daly—the author of 'Seventeenth Summer,' a classic of literature and a book that has never been out of print since it was first published, in 1942—spoke at a workshop here," Vogel said. "She received a standing ovation."

Vogel's many hobbies include gardening, swimming, travel and going to museums and concerts.

Gardening is a passion for Vogel and, according to a friend of hers, Marilyn Coffey, professor of English, there is a type of iris that has been in the family for three generations. "Purple El Mohr is the name of this iris," Vogel said. "It was my grandmother's and I have been growing it every year."

"I also grow Tiger Lilies—for FHSU—and I like to give roots away."

Vogel said she admires FHSU students, many of whom hold jobs while taking classes and commuting.

"These students are well-positioned for the workplace of the future because they graduate with computer literacy and with valuable experience in managing many demands on their time."

Vogel said that the faculty at FHSU is exceptional because they offer students personal attention and individual instruction that is rare in today's world.

"This university has had a tradition of 'high touch' for almost a century, and I invite FHSU students to draw on the expertise of the faculty," Vogel said. "We can make a difference, and we do make a difference."

Coffey, who knows Vogel from being on the scholarship committee, said Vogel is a very gifted writer and scholar.

"She combines intellect into intuition in a way that is not common," Coffey said. "The award received by Vogel is well deserved, I am sure."

Vogel said, "I went to a writing conference in Santa Barbara and I listened to writers such as Alex Haley and Bernice Kert," Vogel said. "I cannot forget, even when I try. Bernice's telling me that her mentor at Princeton, Carlos Baker, had advised her that the patron saint of biographers is Percy Verance (i.e., perseverance). I brought home a pet rock, now a paperweight, and named it Percy Verance."
